WASHINGTON.

A New Financial Scheme Introduced in the Senate.

The House Opposed to Railroad Subsidies and Land Grants.

Passage of the Naval Appropriation Bill.

Special Dispatches to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Jan. 18.

A test vote on the question of railroad subsidies was had in the House to-day. Mr. HOLMAN introduced a couple of resolutions, declaring it to be the sense of the House that in the present financial condition of the country no further subsidies of money, bonds or lands should be granted to railroads. The resolutions were divided, and the question being taken on the first, which opposes the granting of any further money or bond subsidies, it was agreed to—yeas, 97; nays, 61. The second resolution, which declares that no further grants of public lands should be made in aid of railroads, but that they should be reserved for homestead for actual settlers, was laid on the table—yeas, 110; nays, 48. This may be taken as a very fair indication of the feeling of the House on the subject.

AFFAIRS IN MISSISSIPPI AND GEORGIA.

The House Reconstruction Committee to-day examined Col. CALLIS, member from Alabama, and two Freedmen's Bureau officers, on the condition of affairs in Mississippi. Their evidence was very much the same as that already given, and concludes the examination, so far as Mississippi is concerned. The evidence in the case of Georgia will be closed to-morrow. The Committee will then prepare their decision, though what it will be it is not possible yet to say. In the case of Mississippi, Judge BRADLEY favors the throwing out of the votes of seven counties, where fraud and violence were practiced, by which the Constitution would stand ratified and the State be admitted under it. Georgia presents a much more complicated case, and how the House can act at all, in the face of the fact that her Representatives are on the floor "exercising all their rights and privileges," is a question which is puzzling the absent members of that body.

MILITARY STAFF DEPARTMENTS.

The Military Committee will shortly take the testimony of several of the leading Generals of the army as to the feasibility of reducing the several staff departments. The Secretary of War has been requested to invite here for that purpose Gens. SHERMAN, MEADE, McDOWELL and others, while Gens. THOMAS, HANCOCK, TERRY and several of the Bureau officers already here will be examined on the subject.

THE OVERLAND MAILS.

The House finally got at WELLS, FARGO & Co., to-day, after little attempt for three Mondays in succession. The resolution agreed to, however, does nothing about their pay, but simply authorizes the Committee on Public Expenditures to inquire as to the manner in which they are carrying out their contract. This is understood to be unobjectionable both to the Company and to the Postmaster-General.

THE SUFFRAGE AMENDMENT.

The debate on the suffrage bill and the constitutional amendment, reported by Mr. BOUTWELL from the Judiciary Committee on the 11th inst., will begin on Saturday next, Mr. BOUTWELL having given notice to-day that he would then call up these propositions.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE CONVENTION.

The National Woman's Suffrage Convention, which meets in this city to-morrow, has brought here a considerable number of notables, who gather on such occasions. Among those who could be seen in the House galleries to-day were the venerable Quakeress, LUCRETIA MOTT, LUCY STONE and others. They are accompanied by sundry hirsute individuals of the male sex.

SENATORS RETURNED.

Senators DRAKE and HENDERSON returned yesterday from the contest in Missouri, and Gov. MORGAN returned from New-York to-night. He has already extended his congratulations to his successful competitor.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

The House passed the Naval Appropriation bill to-day, with the feature reducing the Marine Corps stricken out. The Legislative, Executive and Judicial bill was then taken up, and its consideration proceeded with in Committee of the Whole, Gen. SCHENCK in the chair. It will occupy several days.

THE NATIONAL CURRENCY.

The Committee on Banking and Currency meet to-morrow morning. Among the propositions before them is an amendment to the National Currency act, prohibiting the certification of checks, unless there is an actual deposit absolutely on hand to meet it. This amendment was strongly urged by the Comptroller of the Currency in his last report.

Gen. BUTLER was badly tripped up to-day when he offered his resolution requesting the Comptroller of the Currency to report what banks had exchanged gold interest for currency interest bonds; to what extent this had been done, and directing the Comptroller to stop it. Gen. PAINE immediately showed that the action of the Comptroller was authorized by law, of which Gen. BUTLER seemed entirely ignorant, and that a House resolution could not repeal that law. BUTLER modified his resolution accordingly, and the House then allowed it to pass.

FINANCIAL MEASURES IN THE SENATE.

The most important measure introduced in the Senate to-day was the bill to regulate the finances, with amendments from the Finance Committee, which may be found elsewhere in full. The bill was merely ordered to be printed to-day, and was not read. Senators consequently have not had an opportunity to form any opinion on its merits, and it is not much commented on to-night.

THE COPPER TARIFF.

Senator CHANDLER succeeded in getting up the Copper Tariff bill in the Senate to-day, when it was debated for a couple of hours. Senator ANTHONY offered an amendment imposing a duty of forty-five per cent. ad valorem on manufactures of copper, which was accepted by Mr. CHANDLER, and an amendment of Mr. MORRILL looking to the protection of antipodes, was rejected. The bill will come up again to-morrow, and will continue to be the special order until disposed of. The feeling of the Senate appears to be in favor of its passage.

Dispatches to the Associated Press.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, Jan. 18.

THE VIRGINIA COMMITTEE.

The Virginia Committee called this morning in a body, accompanied by other gentlemen from their State, to pay their respects to Gen. GRANT. The conversation turned largely upon the business of their gentlemen before Congress. The General, who showed a familiarity with the provisions of the Underwood Constitution, expressed himself in favor of a speedy settlement on the general plan published in the papers of the morning. The interview was of some duration, and was highly satisfactory to the gentlemen of the Committee. The delegation subsequently called upon the President and Secretary SCHOFIELD. While not asking to have their own disabilities removed by special act, the Committee are exerting themselves to obtain a general relief of all persons in the State of Virginia, and especially to check the further removal of civil and county officers now going on there, until Congress will act on the whole subject. The Senate's Committee on the Judiciary are under consideration the subject of the restoration of Virginia to the Union, but has not taken formal action upon it.

THE AMNESTY PROCLAMATION.

The President transmitted the following to-day:

To the Senate of the United States:

The resolution adopted on the 5th inst., requesting the PRESIDENT to transmit to the Senate a copy of any proclamation of amnesty made by him since the last adjournment of Congress, and also a copy of the oath of allegiance by what authority of law the same was made, has been received. In accordance therewith I send a copy of a proclamation dated the 25th day of December last.

The authority of law by which it was made is set forth in the proclamation itself, which expressly affirms that it was issued "by virtue of the power and authority in me vested by the Constitution, and in the name of the sovereign people of the United States, and therefore has constitutionally and authoritatively been received by the Judiciary and citizens generally as all and in every case to which it applies, as binding in law to the extent of its terms, upon all persons who directly or indirectly participated in the late insurrection or rebellion a full pardon and amnesty for the offence of treason against the United States, or of adhering to their enemies during the late civil war, with the restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves, and emancipation on the conditions and the laws which have been made in pursuance thereof. The Federal Constitution is understood to be and is regarded by the Executive, as the supreme law of the land, and the provisions of Article 3, of that instrument, provides that the President shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offences against the United States, except in cases of impeachment. The proclamation of the 25th ultimo is in strict accordance with the judicial exposition of the authority thus conferred on the President, and is in no respect by reference to the accompanying papers, is in conformity with the precedent established by WASHINGTON in 1795, and followed by Presidents ADAMS in 1800, MADISON in 1815, and LINCOLN in 1863, and by the present Executive in 1865, 1867, and 1868.

ANDREW JOHNSON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 18, 1869.

First—The proclamation of Gen. WASHINGTON, dated July 10, 1795, granting to citizens who had been engaged in insurrection, and in resisting the collection of revenue on distilled spirits and stills in western counties of Pennsylvania, excepting certain persons described in the proclamation, a general pardon of all treason and other indictable offences.

Second—The proclamation of JOHN ADAMS, dated on the 21st of May, 1800, granting a full pardon to all and every person, including some persons excepted in WASHINGTON's proclamation, concerned in the said insurrection, hereby remarkably and releasing unto all such persons all pains and penalties annexed, or supposed to be incurred for or on account of the premises.

Third—The proclamation of JAMES MADISON, dated Feb. 24, 1815, concerning certain foreigners dwelling from the dangers of their own homes, and certain citizens of New-Orleans, forgetful of their duty, had colparated in forming an establishment on the Island of Barataria, near the mouth of the River Mississippi, for the purpose of a slandestine and lawless trade. The Government of the United States caused the establishment to be broken up, and proceeded to prosecute the offenders by indictment, &c. For which the form in the proclamation the President MADISON granted to the offenders a full pardon of all offences committed against the laws, or touching the intercourse and commerce of the United States with foreign nations, and the President directs all suits, indictments and prosecutions for fines, penalties, forfeitures, &c., to be discontinued and released.

Fourth—The proclamation of President LINCOLN, dated the 8th day of December, 1863, similar to the public, granting to all persons (certain classes excepted) who had participated in the rebellion full pardon and restoration of all rights of property, except as to slaves, and in property cases where the rights of third parties shall have intervened. In this proclamation, Mr. LINCOLN begins by citing the provision in the Constitution empowering the President to grant reprieves and pardons. The laws of Congress declaring forfeitures, &c., and authorizing the President to issue proclamations of amnesty and pardon, with such exceptions as the Executive may deem proper are then cited. Mr. LINCOLN, referring to late but, adds: "Whereas, the Congressional declaration for limited and conditional pardon accords with the well-established judicial exposition of the pardoning power, therefore," &c.

Fifth—The proclamation of President LINCOLN, dated the 26th of March, 1864, defining cases in which persons are entitled to benefits of his preceding proclamation.

Sixth—The proclamation of President JOHNSON, dated the 29th of May, 1865, similar to the LINCOLN proclamation of Dec. 8, 1863, granting pardon and amnesty to persons engaged in the late rebellion.

Seventh—The proclamation of President JOHNSON, dated Sept. 7, 1867, extending full pardon to certain persons who were engaged in the rebellion. This proclamation extends pardon to the classes mentioned who were not pardoned by preceding proclamations.

Eighth—The proclamation of President JOHNSON, of July 4, 1868, granting a general pardon and amnesty to persons engaged in the late rebellion with certain exceptions and reservations.

THE NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The bill introduced in the House to-day by Representative WINDOM, of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of the Northern Pacific Railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, changes entirely the principle heretofore adopted in the grants of subsidy to the Pacific Railroads. It does not ask for any subsidy either in money or in Government bonds, or in any way add to the public debt. Instead of requiring the issue of United States bonds, as heretofore, for which the Government has no security except a second mortgage and one-half the compensation for Government troops, it provides that the Government shall guarantee the interest only on a limited amount of the bonds of the Company, which does not exceed one-half the estimated cost of the road, which bonds are to be secured by a first mortgage on all its property, to be made to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, the Company being required to pay the principal and interest as they become due, to indemnify the United States for said guarantee of interest. All the compensation for transporting troops, supplies, munitions of war, mails, &c., is to be retained by the Government, for which along the line of this road the Government is now required to pay, as shown by the reports of the Quartermaster-General, over $6,000,000 per annum, being a sum very much larger than the annual amount of said guarantee, and is a further security to the Government. In case of any deficiency, the Secretary of the Treasury is empowered at any time to order one-third of the gross earnings of the road to be paid into the Treasury of the United States until all such deficiencies shall be made good. To secure the payment of the principal of said bonds, in addition to the first mortgage above mentioned, the Company is required to pay into the Treasury of the United States two per cent. of the gross earnings of the road, which is to be invested as a sinking fund for the redemption of said bonds at maturity. This is claimed to be the inauguration of a new policy, and while it does not increase the public debt or require the issue of Government bonds, it so extends the aid of the Government as to insure the prosecution of this enterprise, without danger of adding to the public burdens or of hazarding the public credit.

TROOPS ON THE FRONTIER.

It appears from an official document that the number of troops guarding and policing the frontier is 10,541; operating against the Indians and policing the frontier, 6,094; operating, 2,112; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad and policing the frontier, 657; guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 496; guarding traffic on the Missouri River, 1,263; operating against Indians and guarding the Union Pacific Railroad, 3,563; total regular troops, 26,601; total volunteer troops, 4,279; aggregate, 30,814. The employment of volunteers, the acceptance of one regiment of cavalry from Kansas, was authorized by the President, if Gen. SHERIDAN should deem it necessary to a successful prosecution of the Indian campaign. The volunteers are to serve for six months.

QUARTERMASTER'S STORES IN NEW-YORK.

The Secretary of War recommends that he be authorized to hire such suitable building in New-York or vicinity, as may be required for safe and convenient storage of army stores of every description, at a total cost not to exceed $40,000 per annum. He further recommends that no action be taken at present upon the proposition to purchase an armory building in New-York City, as submitted on the 10th instant.

THE SUPREME COURT.

M. A. STRANG et al. vs. The City of Philadelphia.—This is the phase of the Girard will case recently before the Court. It is being claimed that the enlargement of the City of Philadelphia by the consolidation act of 1854 had rendered the execution of the trust impossible, and that it must therefore fail, and the property devised for municipal purposes revert to the heirs-at-law of the testator, the Court now affirmed the judgment below, Mr. Justice GRIER delivering the opinion of the Court, which is an exact transcript of his opinion below, the views thus expressed having been adopted by the Court.

No. 1. GAINES et al. vs. THOMPSON et al.; Sandfords case; opinion by Mr. Justice MILLER.

No. 81. TELLES vs. The City of Boston; petition against the infringement of an oil lamp patent; motion on argument.

NOMINATIONS BY THE PRESIDENT.

The President nominated to the Senate to-day: JOHN A. GARDNER, Secretary of Legation, Mexico, vice Mr. PETERS; WILLIAM W. DIXON, Associate Justice for Montana; R. H. HUNT, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Sixth District of Missouri; S. F. BROOK, Collector of Internal Revenue for the Twenty-first District of Pennsylvania.

COIN CONTRACTS.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Finance Committee, reported a bill legalizing coin contracts. The following is the bill:

Be it enacted, &c., That any contract heretofore made specifically payable in coin shall be legal and valid, and may be enforced according to its terms, anything in the laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding. The company notwithstanding, provided that this section shall not apply to contracts for borrowing of currency, or to the contract for or assumption of any indebtedness under a contract already entered into, unless such contract originally required payment in coin.

SEC. 2. That the same is hereby appropriated out of duties levied from imports, and the proceeds of internal revenue, which sum, during each fiscal year, shall be applied to payment of interest and to the reduction of the principal of the public debt, and such reduction shall be in lieu of the sinking fund provided by the fifth section of an act entitled "An act to authorize the issue of United States notes, and for the redemption and funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States," approved Feb. 25, 1862.

SEC. 3. That the holder of any lawful money of the United States to the amount of fifty dollars, or any multiple of fifty dollars, may convert the same into coin bonds of the United States, under such regulations and rules as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe, and that the Secretary of the Treasury may issue in exchange for such lawful money, coupon or registered bonds of the United States of such denomination, not less than fifty dollars, as he may prescribe, redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the Government, and bearing interest payable in coin in forty years, and bearing an annual interest of five per cent. payable semi-annually in coin; which said bonds shall be exempt from taxation in any town, city or under State, municipal or local authority, and the same and the interest thereon, and the income therefrom shall be exempt from payment of all taxes or duties to the United States, other than such income tax as may be imposed upon other incomes.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to receive from the Collectors of the United States, not bearing interest, payable in coin on demand in coin, at the Treasury of the United States, in such form and of such denomination, not less than fifty dollars, as the Secretary of the Treasury shall be receivable for all taxes, duties or debts payable to the United States. And the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay out the coin so received, to supply amounts of such coin notes, the aggregate amount of United States notes surrendered for conversion into bonds under the preceding section of this act, to the holders of such notes in the City of New-York, or in any part of the territories of the United States bearing six per cent. interest, and thereupon the Secretary of the Treasury shall cancel an amount of said United States notes equal to the securities so purchased, and said coin notes shall also be paid out for coin liabilities of the United States at the option of the holder, provided, however, that the aggregate of coin notes issued under this act, and the outstanding and bullion in the Treasury of the United States; and such coin notes shall be paid according to their terms, and may be renewed from time to time, as the exigencies of the public service shall require.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That any banking association now organized, or that may hereafter organized, under the laws of the United States, to provide a national currency, secured by a pledge of United States bonds, and to provide for their circulation, and the redemption thereof, approved Jan. 3, 1864, as hereby amended, without regard to the provision of section 20 of said act, relating to the amount of circulating notes prescribed by the twenty-second section of said act, to be issued, associate notes, to the amount of the capital stock, payable on demand in coin, and receive notes issued to be obtained in the mode provided in said act as other circulating notes, and shall be paid on demand in coin instead of lawful money, upon the deposit of such notes, the amount of 85 per cent. of the bonds of the United States deposited with the Treasurer of the United States as security for the redemption of such coin notes. No banking shall receive less than $50,000 of such coin notes, and coin bonds and the said coin notes, shall be subject, in all other respects, to the limitations, restrictions and provisions of said act.

Mr. WILLIAMS gave notice that he whether to offer the following amendments to be printed with the bill:

"To amend section 3 by adding thereto the following words:

"Provided that not to exceed one millions lawful money shall be converted into bonds as herein provided in any one year."

"Strike out in section 4, the words 'at his discretion,' and insert in place thereof the words, 'and shall,' and also strike out the words 'at his option,' and insert instead thereof the words 'equal to.'"

The following amendments were proposed to be offered by Mr. CATTELL:

"Add to the end of section 3 the following: 'And any holder of any of the coin coupon bonds of the United States shall present the same to the Treasurer of the United States and demand lawful money of the United States for the coupons of such bonds, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall present the same in lawful money of the United States, unless the amount of the United States notes issued under this act, and the United States coin notes issued with bonds shall not be so redeemable, then the United States have received the payment of coin for their notes.'"

A PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HARLAN called the attention of the Senate to a letter of the correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, Gen. BOYNTON, which had been copied and commented upon in the New-York Tribune of the 15th inst., and which was personal to himself, and he thought to some other Senators.

The letter and Tribune editorial comments upon it were sent to the Clerk's desk and read.

Mr. HARLAN said now for the first time he called attention to a newspaper article. He felt it his duty to do so now, rather for public than for personal reasons. He had nothing to say against the respectable portion of the conducters or correspondents of newspapers, but their profession. The profession consisted of three classes. First, the chief who, by their talents, adorn the profession and give it dignity; second, the mediocre class, who perhaps help to give it respectability; and third, what he would term the laggards, the scavengers of the profession, who do the work that necessitates the existence of the first. He had not in mind the correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette well enough to determine to which class he belonged, but the letter to which he had called attention exhibited also a degree of carelessness or ignorance, or something worse, as would, in his judgment, avoid the author of it to be a correspondent of any respectable journal. He then made a long explanation of his conduct in each transaction, to demonstrate which he was accused of wrong doing—the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad extension, the sale of the Cherokee Reservation in Texas, and the sale of lands to the Sioux City Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad—and said he had never had any more interest in, or any property in, or any pecuniary interest in, any railroad than any other citizen of the United States.

The following amendments were proposed to be offered by Mr. CATTELL:

"Add to the end of section 3 the following: 'And any holder of any of the coin coupon bonds of the United States shall present the same to the Treasurer of the United States and demand lawful money of the United States for the coupons of such bonds, and the Secretary of the Treasury shall present the same in lawful money of the United States, unless the amount of the United States notes issued under this act, and the United States coin notes issued with bonds shall not be so redeemable, then the United States have received the payment of coin for their notes.'"

Mr. HOWARD said that, so far as he knew, there was no good foundation for such a statement, and read a letter to that effect from an expert.

Mr. SUMNER said that, although his State was not directly interested in the bill, he would state why the Committee had reported it unanimously. The reasons were that it had passed the House in this form by a vote of more than two to one; that the interests to be promoted by it were anxious for its immediate passage; that the objections taken to it had not been made in the Committee, and that it was thought to promote the credit and benefit of the country subject presented was made general.

Mr. MORRILL did not think the amendments offered by Mr. WILSON germane to his amendment, and proposed that it be withdrawn and offered as the subject of an amendment.

Mr. WILSON withdrew the amendment temporarily.

Mr. ANTHONY suggested that the Senator from Michigan, CHANDLER, and the Senator from Vermont, MORRILL, and some competent third, discuss the bill. He did not wish to vote against it.

Mr. CHANDLER said that that could be done only by his absentmindedness, which he had no intention to do.

A vote was then taken on Mr. MORRILL's amendment, which was lost, yeas 20, nays 27.

At 4:40 o'clock the Senate adjourned, the bill still pending.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. BROOKS presented the memorial of J. HALLIGAN, asking the interposition of the United States government with PERSIA for indemnification for the violation of a contract with him in the matter of the Molestin Ship Canal. Referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

THE RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. KELLEY presented the petition of 200 citizens of New-York praying Congress to propose an amendment of the Constitution securing the right of suffrage to citizens without distinction of race or color.

The Speaker proceeded to call the States and Territories for bills and joint resolutions.

By Mr. GAVASHON—To authorize the construction and maintaining of a bridge across the Missouri River at the Three Forks, in Montana Territory. Referred to the Committee on Commerce and Canals.

By Mr. ARNELL—To provide for the representation of the District of Columbia in Congress. Referred to the Judiciary Committee.

By Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio—Providing that after March 4, 1869, no Senator or Representative in Congress shall be entitled to receive or transmit by mail any letter free of postage. Referred to the Post Office Committee.

By Mr. JAMES, of Kentucky—For the cooperation of the United States Coast Survey in the geological surveys instituted by the several States. Referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. BEAMAN—To compel the National Banks to make a semi-annual statement. Referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

THE OVERLAND MAIL CONTRACT.

Mr. CONOVER, on behalf of Mr. FARNSWORTH, offered a resolution directing the Committee on Public Expenditures to inquire into and report the facts and circumstances in connection with the contract with WELLS, FARGO & Co. for carrying the United States mails between the termini of the Pacific Railroad, the character of the contract, its terms, the probable cost of the service, and the manner in which the service has been and is being performed.

Mr. FARNSWORTH favored the adoption of the resolution. It was accepted.

GRANTS OF SURVEYS.

Mr. HOLMAN offered the following resolutions:

Resolved, That in the present condition of the national finances, no further subsidies ought to be given by Congress, either in money, bonds, or public lands, to railroad corporations, or to promote local enterprises; but the whole resources of the country ought to be applied to the payment of the public debt, and to relieving the people in such a manner as will relieve the people from the burdens of taxation.

Resolved, That the grants of the public lands to corporations ought to be discontinued, and the whole of such lands ought to be held as a sacred trust to secure homesteads to actual settlers, and for no other purpose whatever.

He moved the previous question on the adoption of the resolutions. The previous question was seconded.

Mr. WINDOM moved to lay the resolutions on the table. The motion was negatived, there being only thirty-four affirmative votes.

Mr. BOUTWELL demanded a separate vote on the resolutions.

The vote was taken on the first resolution, and it was adopted—yeas 96, nays 61, as follows:

The question recurred on the second resolution.

Mr. JULIAN desired to offer a substitute that no public lands shall be given to aid in the construction of railroads, except on condition of actual settlement in quantities not greater than 160 acres to the purchaser, and for a fixed sum upon the full price.

Mr. HOLMAN declined to let the substitute be offered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Indiana, moved to lay the resolution on the table, because it would interfere with the Soldiers' Bounty bill.

The resolution was laid on the table—yeas 110, nays 54.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, said if he had been in the Hall at the time his name was called he would have voted "No," emphatically.

THE NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, moved to suspend the rules that he might offer an amendment to the Naval Appropriation bill, striking out the clause in the Marine Corps, &c., which had been ruled out as not in order.

The rules were not suspended—ayes 61, not two-thirds.

The amendments reported from the Committee on Ways and Means to the Naval Appropriation bill were then taken up.

Mr. RANDALL expressed the hope that the amendment reducing the appropriation for the Philadelphia Navy-yard from $80,000 to $25,000, would not be agreed to. The larger appropriation was necessary.

Mr. KELSEY remarked that the reduction was approved by all the leading journals and both citizens of Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL suggested that the approval was all one party side.

The amendments were agreed to, and the bill passed.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Appropriations, offered a resolution directing the Comptroller of the Currency to inform the House what banks had relinquished their charters as National Banks, and were doing business under State charters, still retaining their National Bank circulation, with the amount of such circulation outstanding. Also, whether any bank had been instructed that the twenty-ninth section of the Banking act, limiting the amount of the liability of any person in the association to one-tenth of its capital, does not apply to the indorsements or collateral liabilities or to checks certified as good.

Mr. BUTLER entered into a statement explanatory of the several points embraced in the resolution.

Mr. DELANO remarked that the best margin for the security of bank circulation was on the Pacific Railroad bonds. He believed that an unjust attack upon the Comptroller of the Currency had been made. It would occur to every gentleman that bonds payable, interest and principal, in currency, and which were not issued for that purpose, should not be used to antagonize United States bonds. In his judgment both the Treasury and the Comptroller were both paid and pliant servants of the banks, and were doing the business of the banks.

Mr. PAINE read from the law to prove that it authorized the Comptroller to receive Pacific Railroad bonds for five-twenties.

Mr. BUTLER made an allusion to the gentlemen opposing the resolution, and, who, he said, had arguments written and prepared for them.

Mr. DELANO said that the statement was not warranted by the fact.

Mr. BUTLER—That argument which you made was written by the Comptroller.

Mr. DELANO—No argument was written by anybody.

Mr. BUTLER—I take that back; I think it was no argument; it was only a paper; [laughter;] it had no argument about it. The fact, however, that these gentlemen came with a prepared document to meet a resolution of inquiry showed that they were interested against the interest of the people.

Mr. SCOFIELD argued that the resolution was ambiguous in its language, and that the House had no right by a simple resolution to change or suspend the operation of law. He suggested that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. BUTLER—To send it there, is to send it to a sleep that knows no waking. That Committee has so little to do, that another Committee was occupying its room. It was an every-day practice for the House to direct subordinates not to exercise their discretion in a certain way. If the Comptroller was compelled, by law to do this, then he admitted that it would require another law to prevent being done, but he was only authorized to do it if, in his judgment, he saw fit, and this resolution was to instruct his judgment. That was all. He was willing, however, to strike out that part of the resolution directing the cessation of the practice.

Mr. BOOREM mentioned the case of the Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Albany, which, having been a State Bank, organized under the National Banking law, with a capital of $360,000 deposited, and $360,000 in bonds, took out the circulation to which it was entitled, and then reconstructed itself into a State Bank with that circulation still out, and now claimed that it was no longer subject to the National Banking law.

Mr. PRICE wanted the country to know that when a bank abandoned its National Bank charter and went into business as a State bank, or as a private bank, it returned to the United States every dollar of circulation that it had received. He had no objection to the resolution calling for information; it was to that part of it that was now withdrawn that he objected.

The resolution omitting the part directing the cessation of the exchange was adopted.

WAR DEPARTMENT BUILDINGS.

Mr. SCOFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, offered a resolution instructing the Secretary of the Treasury to withhold all payments of money to W. W. CORCORAN for the use of lands and buildings in the District of Columbia, supposed to belong to him and taken possession of by the War Department during and since the rebellion for national purposes, until the further action of Congress.

VIRGINIA AND TEXAS.

Mr. BOUTWELL, from the Committee on Reconstruction, reported back the Senate joint resolution respecting the Provisional Governments of Virginia and Texas.

The joint resolution provides that the persons now holding civil offices in the Provisional Governments of Virginia and Texas who cannot take the oath prescribed by the act of July 2, 1862, the test oath, and on the passage of this resolution, be removed therefrom, and makes it the duty of the District Commander to fill the vacancies so created by the appointment of persons who

The Protectorate Question—Gen. Grant and the Tenure-of-Office Bill—The Washington and New-York Telegraph Project.

From Our Special Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Jan. 13.

The Protectorate does not meet with that enthusiasm of welcome which was expected for it. Gen. BANKS, who reported it from the Committee, always commands a hearing, by reason of a good address and an excellent voice, but he was interrupted by a running fire of queries, drawing concessions from him that gradually eviscerated the whole proposition, and finally the noisy members adjourned the House in the middle of his speech, and on the next day made a joke of the matter altogether. Perhaps Congress thinks it would be better to govern what we already have, before we fly to file we know not of; perhaps the entering wedge of St. Domingo is not large enough to satisfy the "rapid juice of more ambitious blood;" perhaps the slaveholders of the Caribbean Archipelago are a power to dammit the great North and West out of their career of freedom; perhaps we are so wealthy that we can afford to dispense with the revenues of the Antilles, and a few millions more tax-payers are really not worth consideration.

Apropos of the matter, the last people who have turned up in this extraordinary place, which is a sort of Sargossa sea, collecting every weed that floats upon the ocean, are the deputies of the Cuban revolutionists. The cry is no longer Rehabilitated Poland, or Bleeding Hungary, or Down-trodden Ireland, or United Italy, but Free Cuba—the phantom of a Republic already rising over one-half the Island, with a chief, a Legislature and a newspaper. And if there is no interest attaching to the idea of fitting into liberty and consequent development those islands along our coast that first ran out to meet the spirit of Western discovery, then COLUMBUS COLUMBUS lived in vain, and ISABELLA of Castile sold her jewels to no more purpose than ISABELLA of Spain did the other day, when she took advantage of the Duchess DE MONTE's sale to realize on a necklace or two of her own.

Notwithstanding the way in which all this may eventuate in the present, the policy of the next Administration is, in the nature of things, likely to be aggrandisement. As a wise physician distracts the mind of a patient from his ailments, so perhaps will Gen. GRANT give the internal sores of the country time to heal, while he occupies its attention with affairs of another nature. That he will surround himself in his Cabinet with men of advanced thought is certain. States are as common as schoolboys, but it is doubtful if a correct list has even been approximated upon any one of them; and it is, indeed, of but slight comparative consequence, for the man who, through Donelson, Shiloh, and the Wilderness, never once convened an absolute council of war other than as his Generals met to receive their instructions, and who, behind the smoke of his cigar thought out the plan of his campaigns, lonely as a god in a cloud, will scarcely suffer the minds of advisers to dwarf his own in any crisis of administration, and in his own the people have expressed their faith.

The subject of the Protectorate being laid upon the table, the principal remaining topics in which the public mind now exercises itself are the Civil Service and the Tenure-of-Office bills. Reasoning from precedents, nothing seems more unlikely than that the repeal of the latter can be effected. For the Senate has tasted the sweets of authority, and is not at all inclined to surrender that authority; it is, in truth, the aristocratic element in our Government, and when has such a body been seen to relinquish the power it had once grasped? The well-known desire of Gen. GRANT to be relieved of the shackles which this act imposes on him, gives special zest to the inquiry as to what course the Senate will pursue. And we may be be confident that in a matter which involves, as this does, the very integrity of the Administration, Gen. GRANT will not complacently suffer himself to be thwarted. The history of the Tenure-of-Office bill presents one of the most extraordinary political facts on record—in this—that at a moment when popular prerogative asserted itself with more emphasis than ever before in the memory of man, as one might say, the House of Representatives, its organ and advocate, should have permitted itself to invest the complete mastery of the vast patronage of the Government in that body which is furthest removed from the people, least responsive to the popular wish, and least amenable to popular control—converting, as it were, the Government from a democratic Republic into a senatorial oligarchy. But, however, it may be regarded in this light, Gen. GRANT is admonished, by the actual experience of the country under it, that corruption in office cannot be prevented or punished so long as it remains the law of the land. It has been mentioned before that two Administrations were now running here, and the passage through the House of the motion to repeal this bill was certainly the first act of the new one—unless the defeat of the other bill take precedence. For these two bills, the Tenure-of-Office and the Civil Service, have a singular reciprocal relation to each other—the former taking all patronage out of the hands of Gen. GRANT, and the latter placing all patronage in the hands of Mr. COLFAX.

But while we all know what the one bill is and has been, the Civil Service bill, on the other hand, came with a curious mask on its face. While it proposed a system of competitive examination that, at first glance, seemed the one thing necessary to correct our miserable manner of appointment, it was in reality a sham, and a failure, and an utterly anti-republican movement. It forgot the fact that a man may be a breathing encyclopedia of learning and yet a scoundrel to boot; it assumed honesty to be a matter of letters; that the decalogue and the alphabet were convertible forms; it rigorously examined clerks who have no opportunity for rascality, and it passed entirely by all those heads of departments and high officials who are alone responsible for malfeasance, and alone have opportunity for such irregularities as to-day deplete our Treasury; it gave support and situations to thousands of boys who have had the last four years to devote to their reading, writing and arithmetic, and it excluded from any such easy livelihood all who during those four years have been fighting the country's battles, graduating only at the hard academy of the field. It was, in short, a system that can never go into successful operation in a country where the rabble rule, and which is proud of its rulers—believing that its advance among the nations of the earth is due to its elevating the brutal masses of the people into pieces of responsible power.

In the meantime, a measure of totally different character from either of these subjects of remark has been introduced into the House of Representatives—one disclosing a possible vista of great consequence, although something quite remote from all party politics. It is the bill to establish a telegraph line between Washington and New-York, for the use of the Government, and through it we have a glimpse of

"The prophetic soul
Of the wide world dreaming on things to come."

This measure, should it prove successful, can scarcely be anything else than the initial step of proceedings by which, in a legitimate manner, the Government shall gradually possess itself of all the telegraphs of the country, has standing Prof. LOOMIS' poetical and phantasmagorical company, should they over find themselves in running order. And when once a Government has made the telegraph its own, the next step must be the railroads. Belgium has, in this instance, set us an example worthy of following; and cheapness, comfort, regularity and safety have been the results to her as they would be to us. The average yearly gain of railways on their capital is twenty-one per cent, which, instead of enriching monopolies or individuals, would then become a direct part of the national revenue, or else would either be returned to the people in the shape of the traveling comforts they have a right to demand, or in such reduction of fare as would cause railroads to become practical highways for the million,—a consideration by no means slight in a country whose distances are of such magnitude as our own. In any event, one positive gain could be counted upon—that the trains running into Washington City would no longer be composed of incomparably the worst cars in the whole rolling-stock of the country. Northern Capital Coming South—The Prospects for the People—The Political Issues in Tennessee.

From Our Own Correspondent.

KNOXVILLE, Friday, Jan. 15, 1869.

Soon after the close of the war, many parties from the North came South and invested heavily in cotton plantations and farming lands. Nearly all of these investments proved unfortunate, for reasons which do not now exist, and the effect was very ruinous upon the South. Property depreciated greatly, and the best plantations in some of the Gulf States were exchanged for interior farming lands in this section. Capitalists North refused to send money South upon any terms, and for two years the Southern people lasted fully of the fires of their sap. It seemed as though the reaction from such a stupor would never come, but it has come at last, and the South is now on the high way to wealth. There seems now to be a growing desire on the part of Northern monied men to find investments in some portion of the South. The increased interest upon their part is very noticeable and very gratifying. In your great city of New-York business men find time to turn from the wild schemes and fickle fortunes of Wall-street, to investigate the merits of investments here offered, and every train from the East brings some prospectors and many letters of inquiry. Large sales of real estate have been made within the past two months, and some very heavy negotiations for iron and coal properties are now pending. Recent experiments in iron works have proved so successful that the building of others is but a question of time.

THE RECENT RAILROAD CONVENTION.

As a practical effort to encourage this wide-spread interest in the South, our railroad men, in Convention at Atlanta, Ga., assembled a few days ago, made arrangements for a through passenger tariff, which, if carried out, will be of great importance. By this arrangement, emigrants are to be transported from New-York South at the rate of one cent per mile, and "prospectors" at the rate of two cents. An office is to be established in New-York, at which parties who desire to travel South for the purpose, forsooth, to prospect for a new home or a business investment, can procure the necessary papers to enable them to travel at the special rates. This is not only a liberal but a very sagacious movement on the part of our railroad men, and will in a few years repay them tenfold upon their investment. Our East Tennessee roads were represented in that Convention, and were parties to the agreement. If Gen. MEADE, of the Virginia roads, ratifies the arrangements will be perfected at once, and the inducements published. Under these terms, we anticipate a very heavy increase in travel, and eventually a marked increase in immigration.

PRODUCE MOVEMENTS SOUTH.

Are now very heavy, owing to the rise in the rivers and mountain streams, which brings hay, corn, and oats from the more inaccessible points, and from the buoyancy of money in the cotton regions. Parties now here from Georgia and Alabama report money more abundant than it ever has been. East Tennessee ships almost all her surplus produce South, where she finds a better market than elsewhere. Our farmers, merchants, and mechanics all work for the agricultural regions of the South, and prosper as they prosper.

The towns of South Carolina and the City of Charleston seem to share in the new prospect, as we find the promise for the completion of their part of our Cincinnati and Charleston Railroad more definite. The Presidents of our roads composing that line are now in Nashville working with the Legislature for further appropriations, and advices received here to-day indicate that they will succeed.

ENFRANCHISEMENT.

The enfranchisement of those now under disabilities is the issue upon which the coming political contest in this State will be fought. The movement has been fully inaugurated at Nashville by the speech of Speaker ROWLETT, of the House of Assembly, and by the letter of the Secretary of State, both of whom are active members of the Republican Party. This movement begun by Republicans has a nucleus of men men as Senator FOWLER and the men above named. Extreme Radicals in Tennessee have provoked this division in their ranks by their own folly. The reaction has now begun, and will in its rare its season of high carnival. That the disabilities under which 100,000 voters now labor should be perpetuated for years to come, is unjust and impolitic, and the movement that such is the policy of the dominant wing of the Republican Party is enough to indicate that a bitter and exciting controversy is before us. Of course there will be harsh and unkind reflections upon all who favor any modification or repeal of the disabilities now existing, and their motives and intentions will be suspected. Men who will drink away many from severing such a policy. Gov. BROWNLOW will not be active in this controversy, as he will then be in the Senate. It is unfortunate that there should be such a personal ill-feeling between Mr. FLETCHER and Gov. BROWNLOW; for, as the former will, by virtue of his position, be a leader in the canvass, his influence with thereby be somewhat affected. My own opinion is that if the questions can be fairly and impartially presented, a majority of the voters of the State will favor a modification of the present franchise laws. Some writers present the issue in too strong a light. It is not true that all the intelligence or honesty or wealth of the State is unrepresented at the polls; but it is true that there are many thousands of our heaviest tax-payers and well-disposed citizens who are disfranchised. MARYLAND.

The Inauguration of Gov. Bowie—His Allusion to Gen. Grant.

HON. ODEN BOWIE was installed at Annapolis on Wednesday in his office as Governor of Maryland, for three years. In consequence of the illness of Gov. SWANN, who was not present, the Secretary of State, Hon. JOHN M. CARTER, and Gen. LATROBE, of the Governor's military staff, represented him on the occasion, and officiated in the transfer of the Executive Department to the new incumbent. The ceremonies were uncontentious, with a respectable attendance of citizens, including a considerable number from Baltimore. Gov. BOWIE delivered a brief address on the occasion, in which, after speaking of the favorable condition of the State financially and otherwise, he said:

The country has just passed through an exciting contest between the two great political parties. The result has been peacefully and immediately accepted and acquiesced in. Every disposition is everywhere very properly manifested to give the coming Administration a fair and liberal trial, and it deserving, it should and generously receive it. I am assured by those best acquainted with Gen. GRANT, that he is a man of eminent and liberal ideas, of generous impulses, of high magnanimity, of firm purpose, and of exalted sense of right and justice. He is, fortunately, a man to lead and will not be led. The same antagonism between Congress and the President, which threatened all of Presidents JOHNSON's wise and sincere efforts for peace, will not exist. The same motives which prompted him at Appomattox to accord just and liberal terms to Gen. LEE and his veterans of many bloody and brilliant battle fields, will nerve him, let us hope, to be just and reasonable to those States from which those veteran came, and to those people whom they so gallantly represented. The same firmness of character which made him insist upon the observance of terms there agreed upon, will enable him to lead others, and willing perhaps than himself to restore to the inestimable rights the people of one entire Southern State. Such a probable condition we of Maryland so deeply deplore. "Let us have peace" was his utterance, reflecting the aspiration of the people and resulting in his election. It is with him to "let us have peace." His is the opportunity seldom offered to man. If he seizes it and improves it, his will be the blessing and the glory. The country will be pacified and prosperous, reconstructed and reunited; and if this be the result, as long as the Republic shall exist, his name will be honored uncovered. In this desirable consummation Maryland has as deep an interest as any other State, and as her Executive, while I shall compromise no political sentiment of my own, if I be a majority of her citizens, I shall reflect her wishes and interest by giving to the Administration of Gen. GRANT a cordial support in all, and every effort for the supremacy of the Constitution, and the recognition of the rights of the Union.

VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND, Va., Saturday, Jan. 9, 1869.

DEAR SIR: No apology was necessary for your note to me on the 7th inst.; for, surely, of the "prominent men" who lately met in this city, of whom you cited you rules, may most have and take into their deliberations and consideration our rights, opinions and sacred honor as well as their own, without our consent or consultation with us. We may humbly speak for ourselves, and say whether we choose them to represent us at Washington or not. I do not consent to their movement. I am not willing for them to represent me, and I protest against every reason they have urged for their conventions and their course. You have sought this expression from me, and I had resolved to be silent; but I don't say this respectfully, as there is a necessity and a duty now to withhold no longer from each other any well considered opinions we have formed, and which we express calmly and with decorum. Several of the prominent gentlemen, whom you name, who, it seems, have sent a deputation to the Federal Capital, are my friends, and all of them are worthy of due respect, and I would say nothing of their course, doubtless taken from the best of motives, except what is necessary to "save me from my friends."

I can't say that the "movement" of the "prominent gentlemen" surprised me; preceding events cast their shadows before them. The meeting last Summer at the White Sulphur; the Conservative messengers between North and South; the credentials they bore from one to another leader; the terms they proposed as a sine qua non of success in the Presidential election, and the sale cry of "Seward" in the papers, all disclosed to me the form of movement which now presents itself visibly and tangibly out of all mist and cloud. Nothing "surprises" me at anything. We can't now tell to know what it is that some gentlemen will accept, though that they would not have it by all means, if they could help themselves! And the least sagacity warns you and me and all, that their expressions of willingness to accept what you and I can't accept, and what we probably prevent, may be the thing what a little more endurance and patient abiding of our time might have obtained by a still firm faith in the obligations of a written Constitution and in the returning sense of justice and patriotism in the minds of the nation to observe them. Their "willingness," thus put forward of any trial for the Presidency, may be made a means of coercing us into a move on our part so to tempt them to turn another screw upon us; but it will not either prevent what was inevitable in the intended course of our enemies toward us, nor mitigate its severity in the least. Out bone, then? I tell you, gentlemen, that if, as you say, the "Alexandria constitution" or the "Black Crook" constitution are to be the alternatives of my fate, I will take neither. As Mr. B. W. LEAKE once, under the signature of "Algernon Sydney," said respecting much less significant alternatives: "If I take either may a coroner's inquest bring me in felo de se," with a stake through my body and bury me in the highway!" If either is forced upon me, I am not to blame; but I will be blamed by myself and my heirs forever if I take either, by and with my own consent, or for and in consideration of a price. I would as soon barter honor or chastity for a price. If Virginia is to be forced, she will be pilfered, but if she consents, or sells her honor, her oath will never be taken that she was violated.

Let her take death, I say, rather than dishonor! There is no political sentimentalism in this; but common sense and faith in the moral law, and some experience in political events, teach me it is policy and expediency thus to abide in our own continence. Gentlemen say let us be forced to it, and therefore they consent. My reason for not consenting is, that it is to be forced upon us. Why consent if it is to be forced? Why help the force to wrong us? Why strip ourselves of all plea before judicial tribunals or the tribunal of the world's public sentiment? Why not save our honor? Out bone, I repeat, to consent? If there be any consent to be, is it for us than either of these alternatives? If not, then is for one who will fold my arms and take what force may dictate. I am not sure that it will not be better than "prominent gentlemen" may bargain for. They are too weak in numbers and in influence to be my national attorneys in fact, and I don't approve of their programme of action. I don't know what instructions they are, beyond the principles they have avowed and I can't indorse. And so far as I am concerned, I prefer to be illegally and unconstitutionally disfranchised by force, rather than to be illegally and unconstitutionally enfranchised, by consent, in such a case, involving honor as well as right, liberty and property. What would you do, do you think? Anything, I say, is better than to consent to the violation of both the State and Federal Constitutions, in yielding every point against which we have been contending and thus by holding out. But there is something far better than either, the Alexandria or the Black Crook constitution.

What has become of that constitution of Virginia under which she, as a body politic, was existing when Congress obtained her consent to form the State of new Virginia, while the war was raging? Of that Constitution under which she sent Senators and Representatives to the Congress of the United States before the war began and before new Virginia was framed by and with the consent of old Virginia? Did the act of consenting to have been made have that Eve-like rib taken from her side? Couldn't she survive and didn't she survive the operation, because she was herself an Eve and not an Adam, too feminine herself to bear the excision by inhumane surgery instead of by Divine touch? Was it a Cesarean operation upon a mother's corpse? Strange to say "prominent gentlemen" don't see the point. I say she did not, and that she has a Constitution yet surviving, under which she may well live long enough at least to take a new lease for living long, and, I hope, forever. They say the late revolution (consisting, as I say, of a conflict of States and Government) destroyed the body politic, the State of old Virginia! I am not so far from treason, if there be any thing true in the facts of history, anything certain in the science of logic, or anything known and acknowledged in public law, it is that the State of Virginia existed and continued to exist during the whole war, as ever before the war, according to the rules and destruction and consent of Congress itself. And of what else than the State of old Virginia, or any body politic or State, consists?

1. Of territory, defined by known and fixed boundaries.

2. Of population, defined by known and fixed citizenship.

3. Of electors, defined by a known and fixed elective franchise.

4. These three elements of republican government are primary, and constitute the conventional capacity or power of a State or body politic to form a constitution, or the organic law, irrepealable and unchangeable, except by the conventional power, and sunrises and sunsets of time.

5. The secondary elements are municipal, represented by the three departments, executive, legislative and judicial, embracing all officers and agents for the enactment, the execution and construction of statute laws.

These elements are necessary to the being and activity of a State. The primary elements alone are essential to its being, however officers and agents of the municipal departments may be essential to its action. There may be no Government, no members of the Legislature, no Judges on the Bench—they may be all destroyed by act of God, by pestilence or by war, or they, the mere municipal officers, may all leave the place of the office of their State, but the State in all its elements and parts may, and Virginia did and does continue to exist. The mere municipal departments may have lost all their officers, and may be wanting in all their functionaries, but the body politic exists unless destroyed by foreign war, or by a successful and consummate revolution.

The late war between the Southern Confederacy of States and the Federal Union of States was not a foreign war, inter gentes, but it was a civil war, an unsuccessful revolution of States, the failure of which exposed neither States nor persons to the jus belli, absolute under the laws of nations, but exposed persons only to the penalties for treason and treason under the Constitution of the United States.

In stating these propositions, I am relying on no obnoxious and new procrustes principles of State rights, such as those of '98 and '99. They were hushed and made silent by the result of the war. But I am speaking the plain doctrine of the Constitution, of public law, of the Federal Judiciary and the Federal American publicists. I speak by the Constitution and by authority of WHEATON's elements of international law, when I say the Government of the United States is a "compositive Government." The sovereignty is divided into "external" and "internal" sovereignty. The former is lodged in the Federal body politic of the United States of America. Its "internal" sovereignty is originally vested in its component parts. Its external sovereignty is governed by the International law, with its absolute "jus belli;" and its internal sovereignty is governed, not by the International law, but by the supreme law of internal sovereignty, the Constitution of the United States, which gives it no power to make war at all upon its own members, the States of the Union. It is a solecism to say that any sovereignty can make war upon its own citizens, subjects or people.

It follows, therefore, that the power given to Congress to declare war, is a power to declare war against foreign nations, and its supreme law is the international law. The jus belli of that power is absolute; it may be all that a sovereign can do; it may seize, capture, kill, blockade, besiege and devastate; it may destroy, annihilate a State by taking its territory, making captives its people and obliterating its sovereignty and very body politic; but one thing is an exception proves the rule of its omnipotence—it can't hang its "enemies" for treason. Major ANDRE in the revolution could be executed as a "spy, but he could not be as a "traitor." Great Britain might have annihilated the independence and sovereignty of the United States, in the war of 1812, but she could not have executed ANDREW JACKSON for treason on land, or ISAAC HULL for piracy on the high seas. But, in a civil war, internal and domestic, where revolution and treason are synonymous, and where their own rightful Sovereignty, the rule is exactly reversed—the rebels are traitors not enemies, and may be executed as such, because they are traitors and not enemies; but the Government and States, bodies politic and sovereignties which they rebel against, don't fall, are not destroyed by the rebellion or revolution, unless the latter are successful. Civil war itself don't let in the absolution of the rule of the international law; but the language of the United States Court is, "the Constitution preserves all its vitality" in the supreme law over the Federal Government and the States and their citizens and subjects, (see opinions of the United States Courts for the Eastern District of Missouri and the Southern District of Illinois &c., opinion of Judge DAVIS, pp. 35, 36.) One of the ablest opinions upon the subject, he (Judge DAVIS) says: "If the insurrection created only a civil war, it would be conceded that the municipal law of the State would be the rule of decision in the courts of the United States, but it has assumed the proportions of a war, and it is a well-settled rule of International law, that a civil war may be so flagrant as to place the insurgent subjects of a government in the attitude of belligerents, and the government, for the purpose of war, may be treated as a sovereign power, and the laws of war may be applied to the insurgent subjects." Yet, I say, I am not a traitor, and I will be not while I live, if I can help it. And, let the other alternative be what it may, I will not be, if I can help it, a prisoner of war, but will be a traitor, if I should be treated as a traitor for my treason. And, let the other alternative be what it may, I would be recommended by the Constitution instantly, and of its own force, clothes any one or more functionaries of the Government with absolute power or powers unknown to the Constitution or prohibited by it; then the other strange anomaly must exist, viz., the instant overthrow of the Constitution, or, rather, that supreme law, by an act of treason! However insignificant the proportions, which chances to be committed in any part of the country by any number of citizens, howsoever inconsiderable. In other words, the resistance to be overcome lessen no constitutional source to be invoked against its foe, if the Constitution ceases to be obliterated because it is assailed, then it evinces whenever it is assailed; and no one has any constitutional authority to defend the assailed remnant of authority.

During the rebellion it was the policy of the Confederacy to be recognized as a belligerent under the laws of nations, to be treated as enemies and not as traitors. This was one step to independence or recognition, and she proposed captives from the Confederate States to be treated as enemies. Fortunately the Federal prisoners were numerous enough to be pledged against this danger. The humanities only of war were recognized; prisoners were exchanged, the yellow flags of non-quarter were suspended, and flags of truce were sent and received. Little people who, it seems, have sent a deputation to the Federal Capital, are my friends, and all of them are worthy of due respect, and I would say nothing of their course, doubtless taken from the best of motives, except what is necessary to "save me from my friends."

I can't say that the "movement" of the "prominent gentlemen" surprised me; preceding events cast their shadows before them. The meeting last Summer at the White Sulphur; the Conservative messengers between North and South; the credentials they bore from one to another leader; the terms they proposed as a sine qua non of success in the Presidential election, and the sale cry of "Seward" in the papers, all disclosed to me the form of movement which now presents itself visibly and tangibly out of all mist and cloud. Nothing "surprises" me at anything. We can't now tell to know what it is that some gentlemen will accept, though that they would not have it by all means, if they could help themselves! And the least sagacity warns you and me and all, that their expressions of willingness to accept what you and I can't accept, and what we probably prevent, may be the thing what a little more endurance and patient abiding of our time might have obtained by a still firm faith in the obligations of a written Constitution and in the returning sense of justice and patriotism in the minds of the nation to observe them. Their "willingness," thus put forward of any trial for the Presidency, may be made a means of coercing us into a move on our part so to tempt them to turn another screw upon us; but it will not either prevent what was inevitable in the intended course of our enemies toward us, nor mitigate its severity in the least. Out bone, then? I tell you, gentlemen, that if, as you say, the "Alexandria constitution" or the "Black Crook" constitution are to be the alternatives of my fate, I will take neither. As Mr. B. W. LEAKE once, under the signature of "Algernon Sydney," said respecting much less significant alternatives: "If I take either may a coroner's inquest bring me in felo de se," with a stake through my body and bury me in the highway!" If either is forced upon me, I am not to blame; but I will be blamed by myself and my heirs forever if I take either, by and with my own consent, or for and in consideration of a price. I would as soon barter honor or chastity for a price. If Virginia is to be forced, she will be pilfered, but if she consents, or sells her honor, her oath will never be taken that she was violated.

Let her take death, I say, rather than dishonor! There is no political sentimentalism in this; but common sense and faith in the moral law, and some experience in political events, teach me it is policy and expediency thus to abide in our own continence. Gentlemen say let us be forced to it, and therefore they consent. My reason for not consenting is, that it is to be forced upon us. Why consent if it is to be forced? Why help the force to wrong us? Why strip ourselves of all plea before judicial tribunals or the tribunal of the world's public sentiment? Why not save our honor? Out bone, I repeat, to consent? If there be any consent to be, is it for us than either of these alternatives? If not, then is for one who will fold my arms and take what force may dictate. I am not sure that it will not be better than "prominent gentlemen" may bargain for. They are too weak in numbers and in influence to be my national attorneys in fact, and I don't approve of their programme of action. I don't know what instructions they are, beyond the principles they have avowed and I can't indorse. And so far as I am concerned, I prefer to be illegally and unconstitutionally disfranchised by force, rather than to be illegally and unconstitutionally enfranchised, by consent, in such a case, involving honor as well as right, liberty and property. What would you do, do you think? Anything, I say, is better than to consent to the violation of both the State and Federal Constitutions, in yielding every point against which we have been contending and thus by holding out. But there is something far better than either, the Alexandria or the Black Crook constitution.

What has become of that constitution of Virginia under which she, as a body politic, was existing when Congress obtained her consent to form the State of new Virginia, while the war was raging? Of that Constitution under which she sent Senators and Representatives to the Congress of the United States before the war began and before new Virginia was framed by and with the consent of old Virginia? Did the act of consenting to have been made have that Eve-like rib taken from her side? Couldn't she survive and didn't she survive the operation, because she was herself an Eve and not an Adam, too feminine herself to bear the excision by inhumane surgery instead of by Divine touch? Was it a Cesarean operation upon a mother's corpse? Strange to say "prominent gentlemen" don't see the point. I say she did not, and that she has a Constitution yet surviving, under which she may well live long enough at least to take a new lease for living long, and, I hope, forever. They say the late revolution (consisting, as I say, of a conflict of States and Government) destroyed the body politic, the State of old Virginia! I am not so far from treason, if there be any thing true in the facts of history, anything certain in the science of logic, or anything known and acknowledged in public law, it is that the State of Virginia existed and continued to exist during the whole war, as ever before the war, according to the rules and destruction and consent of Congress itself. And of what else than the State of old Virginia, or any body politic or State, consists?

1. Of territory, defined by known and fixed boundaries.

2. Of population, defined by known and fixed citizenship.

3. Of electors, defined by a known and fixed elective franchise.

4. These three elements of republican government are primary, and constitute the conventional capacity or power of a State or body politic to form a constitution, or the organic law, irrepealable and unchangeable, except by the conventional power, and sunrises and sunsets of time.

5. The secondary elements are municipal, represented by the three departments, executive, legislative and judicial, embracing all officers and agents for the enactment, the execution and construction of statute laws.

These elements are necessary to the being and activity of a State. The primary elements alone are essential to its being, however officers and agents of the municipal departments may be essential to its action. There may be no Government, no members of the Legislature, no Judges on the Bench—they may be all destroyed by act of God, by pestilence or by war, or they, the mere municipal officers, may all leave the place of the office of their State, but the State in all its elements and parts may, and Virginia did and does continue to exist. The mere municipal departments may have lost all their officers, and may be wanting in all their functionaries, but the body politic exists unless destroyed by foreign war, or by a successful and consummate revolution.

The late war between the Southern Confederacy of States and the Federal Union of States was not a foreign war, inter gentes, but it was a civil war, an unsuccessful revolution of States, the failure of which exposed neither States nor persons to the jus belli, absolute under the laws of nations, but exposed persons only to the penalties for treason and treason under the Constitution of the United States.

In stating these propositions, I am relying on no obnoxious and new procrustes principles of State rights, such as those of '98 and '99. They were hushed and made silent by the result of the war. But I am speaking the plain doctrine of the Constitution, of public law, of the Federal Judiciary and the Federal American publicists. I speak by the Constitution and by authority of WHEATON's elements of international law, when I say the Government of the United States is a "compositive Government." The sovereignty is divided into "external" and "internal" sovereignty. The former is lodged in the Federal body politic of the United States of America. Its "internal" sovereignty is originally vested in its component parts. Its external sovereignty is governed by the International law, with its absolute "jus belli;" and its internal sovereignty is governed, not by the International law, but by the supreme law of internal sovereignty, the Constitution of the United States, which gives it no power to make war at all upon its own members, the States of the Union. It is a solecism to say that any sovereignty can make war upon its own citizens, subjects or people.

It follows, therefore, that the power given to Congress to declare war, is a power to declare war against foreign nations, and its supreme law is the international law. The jus belli of that power is absolute; it may be all that a sovereign can do; it may seize, capture, kill, blockade, besiege and devastate; it may destroy, annihilate a State by taking its territory, making captives its people and obliterating its sovereignty and very body politic; but one thing is an exception proves the rule of its omnipotence—it can't hang its "enemies" for treason. The New-York Times, Tuesday, January 19, 1869.

the blank and his usual signature continued it being by Mr. Knox. He thought that he could not tell whether he had ever seen Eckel at the distillery after noon. D. M.: he did not know how often he could take the rectifying-house through the window; on these occasions he did not see Diesendorf and some of the workmen there; Letpunger paid him bets; he saw Letpunger there while the distillery was running the last time; he was in the habit of getting water to water his horses from the aqueduct in the yard; he could not always get water there, and had to get it in a tub and keep it; he signed a statement with regard to his horses, but no other statement; Mr. Dittenhoeffer was present; witness held up his hand when he signed the statement; the Sunday night that Blaisdell and the witness were in the distillery together, when the conversation was made, Diesendorf was not there; he could not recall any other night in which he and Blaisdell were there alone; he had no recollection of seeing Eckel present while the cistern-room was being opened; he had seen him there often when it was open and the whisky was running; in one occasion, when the conversation had been made, he went to the rectifying-house and found the whisky running on the upper floor.

William Parker was next sworn. He was now serving processes of the Forty-fifth-street distillery for the Marshal; went to the distillery to work in April, 1867; he was employed by the superintendent, Mr. Green, and worked till the middle of May; he worked in the cooper department; Blaisdell came and sometimes assisted Mr. Diesendorf in the rectifying-house, receiving whisky when it was running through a pipe from the distillery; Mr. Green was corroborated the previous testimony with regard to the hose connecting the distillery with the rectifying-house; witness was at work at night; he was "night man;" he and Diesendorf fastened the hose and made the connection the first time he saw it, and then he saw whisky running; he saw the cistern-room door open twice; McLaren, Eckel, Hunter and Carr were there; witness was in the beginning of May at about two P. M.; he heard the whisky running from the hose connected and Blaisdell was running.

Cross-examined by Mr. McCarthy.—The witness said that City Marshal Stewart took possession of the distillery in May, and then the witness was engaged to take charge till the case was decided; witness received $18 a week in the distillery; he was paid by Green and afterward by Letpunger; he regarded Letpunger as a superintendent; he was a servant in the distillery; the witness drove off whisky; he fastened the hose to the rubs in the cistern-room three times; for Government officers; he never saw Carr drunk; never saw him take anything stronger than lager-beer or soda-water; he saw Campbell, the miller, drunk once; he never saw Eckel in the rectifying-house; he had seen Blaisdell and McLaren there frequently; he saw the former there but once; then the whisky was not running; McLaren there several times after the distillery had stopped running; he was then in charge under the orders of O'Callahan, the Collector; he could swear that he saw whisky or highwines stopping from the hose when it was connected; the tube held whisky, to the best of witness's knowledge; he saw the hose running into them on other occasions; he had seen a graduated rod, used for the purpose of ascertaining how much whisky or highwines was in one of the tubs; he ascertained that whisky was in the tube while the hose was attached; he found 21 inches of highwines in the tub; he knew of Mr. Carpenter's having been there, but did not know of anything being bought by either of the defendants; he had seen Blaisdell at the distillery at night.

To Mr. Phelps.—On one night when he measured the whisky with the rod, the hose was connected; this was after one A. M.

Walter Agnew came next sworn. He testified that in the Summer of 1867 he was engineer at the Forty-fifth-street distillery; he worked there from July 30 to Feb. 17; he was paid sometimes by Blaisdell and sometimes by Tietjale; Mr. Schuyler engaged him; he worked on off nights; there were two engineers; No saw the cistern-room open about a week after the distillery commenced running; it was about seven or eight P. M.; he saw the hose connected; it went into the rectifying-house through the window; he saw the cistern-room open every once in a while after; he had seen Blaisdell and Eckel there when the cistern-room was open; he had seen the hose attached to the Croton water pipe by means of a goose-neck, which was nailed up a few days after the first seizure.

Cross-examined by Mr. McCarthy.—In November, 1867, he went, with other laborers, to Mr. Dittenhoeffer's office; on Dec. 28, at Dr. Blaisdell's house, he made an affidavit; he did not remember making an affidavit at Dittenhoeffer's office; he gave evidence in a civil suit in this Court to which the defendants were parties; he did not know "one" meeting the distillery and the rectifying-house with a 250 feet long; the hose was used by him as a Croton water pipe; he did not know of its being used for any other purpose; he knew Croton water could be shut off from the hydrant.

Mr. McCarthy here read an affidavit made by the witness Barrett, dated Dec. 28, 1867, setting forth that he knew of his own knowledge that whisky or highwines could be conveyed to the rectifying-house in the manner set forth in an affidavit by Mr. Bailey, and that the tubs were kept nailed down; and generally contradicting the statement that highwines were conveyed from the distillery to the rectifying-house.

The examination of the witness was continued. He said he never said in his affidavit what was set down by the person who took it, to the effect that no whisky could be conveyed from the distillery to the rectifying-house. The affidavit was read to him by a German, who took it down.

To Mr. Phelps.—The witness said he was sent for with others to come to Blaisdell's house, when the affidavit was there; Eckel, Blaisdell and McLaren were there; Blaisdell asked him to come down and make the affidavit; he explained that the connection was not made in the way set forth by Bailey, the pipe was placed in the millrind in September, 1867; he saw the man laying it to the rectifying-house; Blaisdell and Eckel were there; he explained that after shutting off water there was a direct connection through the pipe between the distillery and the rectifying-house.

John R. Keats was the next witness. He testified that he was employed in the distillery from about two weeks after it first started until after the trial of the civil suit; he burned the goose-neck. He was not cross-examined.

Henry Steiner was sworn. He testified that he was in the Summer and Fall of 1867 employed in the distillery; he was employed first in August 1867; he was employed by the foreman, Jake; he saw the cistern-room; it was generally shut; it was open every night; Blaisdell, Eckel and Diesendorf were present the first time he saw it open; Diesendorf opened it and took a hose and connected it with the rectifying-house; the hose was generally attached between ten and eleven o'clock at night, and five and six A. M.; he saw the hose taken off sometimes and sometimes left it; he saw the "master" take it; he was the "master;" he saw the cistern-room open this way about every night; he had seen the defendants there at night; he saw the proprietors there nearly every night at first, but afterward not so often.

Cross-examined.—McLaren was there all night toward October; he was always employed after the seizure in November the witness looked about for some other business; Diesendorf was the person who always turned on the faucets to cause the whisky to flow; after the hose was attached always the outer door was closed, but the inner door could not be; the outer door was a false door; it was always closed after Diesendorf came in out; the false door and the false door both concealed the hose; he had seen Blaisdell or Eckel at different times there when the hose was attached; he never saw Blaisdell there at night; the connection was made after nightfall always; he had seen Eckel there in the night time but not every night.

Thomas Moore was sworn. He testified that he was employed in September, 1867, as fireman at the distillery; he worked there till the first seizure; he was there the night the officers came, and drew his fires by order of the engineer; he gave similar testimony to the preceding witness regarding the connection of the hose and the turning of the cistern-cocks; during the last run, he saw the cistern-door open often; McLaren and Blaisdell were there; he saw the hose connected on May 14, and the place was seized May 16; the night of the seizure McLaren was pulling the hose off and fell and hurt himself; he saw Blaisdell there one night later than 11 o'clock.

Cross-examined.—The witness testified that he, with others, went to Dittenhoeffer's office, but he did not make any affidavit; he was paid by Green, and afterward by Letpunger, in Blaisdell's house; he fired during the first run; he was paid by Tietjale, as clerk for Blaisdell and Eckel; the whisky was running through the hose on the night of the 14th of May; he turned it where the hose leaked.

Knox J. Dexter testified that he was employed on night watchman and fire-keeper at night, at the distillery, from the first fill the night of the first seizure; his orders from Blaisdell were to let no one go in or out; the night the officers came, he told Jake the officers were there; his understanding with Blaisdell was that he was to inform the foreman of the officers came; he was paid by Blaisdell; he saw Blaisdell and Eckel twice; he saw the cistern-room door open; Blaisdell came down under; were there that night; the distillery was running that night.

Henry Eckel testified that he was employed in August, 1867, to work at the distillery, and do anything he was called on to do; he saw the cistern-room opened by Diesendorf three or four days after the distillery started; Blaisdell, Eckel and Diesendorf were there; it was between nine and ten P. M.; Diesendorf attached a hose, the course of which the witness described; he often saw the room open; he saw Blaisdell open it three times; one of these occasions was from eight to ten days before the first seizure; about nine P. M.; he saw barrels filled with whisky from the cistern; the barrels had no marks on them; brands were put on by the Inspector after they were filled; he saw a plate for branding in the distillery, and one in the rectifying-house, similar to that used by the Inspector; he saw this brand used three or four times; when the Inspector was not there; he saw fifty or sixty barrels branded in this way at the rectifying-house, which he helped to load up; he did represent himself in the distillery; he took whisky in the hose seen after it had been detached from the cistern-room tube.

Cross-examined.—McLaren was there all night toward October; he was always employed after the seizure in November the witness looked about for some other business; Diesendorf was the person who always turned on the faucets to cause the whisky to flow; after the hose was attached always the outer door was closed, but the inner door could not be; the outer door was a false door; it was always closed after Diesendorf came in out; the false door and the false door both concealed the hose; he had seen Blaisdell or Eckel at different times there when the hose was attached; he never saw Blaisdell there at night; the connection was made after nightfall always; he had seen Eckel there in the night time but not every night.

Thomas Moore was sworn. He testified that he was employed in September, 1867, as fireman at the distillery; he worked there till the first seizure; he was there the night the officers came, and drew his fires by order of the engineer; he gave similar testimony to the preceding witness regarding the connection of the hose and the turning of the cistern-cocks; during the last run, he saw the cistern-door open often; McLaren and Blaisdell were there; he saw the hose connected on May 14, and the place was seized May 16; the night of the seizure McLaren was pulling the hose off and fell and hurt himself; he saw Blaisdell there one night later than 11 o'clock.

Cross-examined.—The witness testified that he, with others, went to Dittenhoeffer's office, but he did not make any affidavit; he was paid by Green, and afterward by Letpunger, in Blaisdell's house; he fired during the first run; he was paid by Tietjale, as clerk for Blaisdell and Eckel; the whisky was running through the hose on the night of the 14th of May; he turned it where the hose leaked.

Knox J. Dexter testified that he was employed on night watchman and fire-keeper at night, at the distillery, from the first fill the night of the first seizure; his orders from Blaisdell were to let no one go in or out; the night the officers came, he told Jake the officers were there; his understanding with Blaisdell was that he was to inform the foreman of the officers came; he was paid by Blaisdell; he saw Blaisdell and Eckel twice; he saw the cistern-room door open; Blaisdell came down under; were there that night; the distillery was running that night.

Henry Eckel testified that he was employed in August, 1867, to work at the distillery, and do anything he was called on to do; he saw the cistern-room opened by Diesendorf three or four days after the distillery started; Blaisdell, Eckel and Diesendorf were there; it was between nine and ten P. M.; Diesendorf attached a hose, the course of which the witness described; he often saw the room open; he saw Blaisdell open it three times; one of these occasions was from eight to ten days before the first seizure; about nine P. M.; he saw barrels filled with whisky from the cistern; the barrels had no marks on them; brands were put on by the Inspector after they were filled; he saw a plate for branding in the distillery, and one in the rectifying-house, similar to that used by the Inspector; he saw this brand used three or four times when the Inspector was not there; he saw fifty or sixty barrels branded in this way at the rectifying-house, which he helped to load up; he did represent himself in the distillery; he took whisky in the hose seen after it had been detached from the cistern-room tube.

Cross-examined.—This was in March; a Frenchman put the brand on; he did not know the name; the barrels were kept in a room on the first floor, which was locked; the Frenchman had the key; the witness described measurements; now Blaisdell on three different occasions was behind the cistern-room; he was always alone; it was in the night time; once he saw him "open the door in the day time; he did not notice whether he took the hose in or not; it was something to complain that he took no notice of it; he never saw McLaren present when the door was open; he saw McLaren there at night; all night to do over, but not often.

Isaac S. Schuyler testified that he was first employed in the distillery in March, 1867; he was engineer at Blaisdell's house to the Criminal Court building; he was about the building till it was completed; Blaisdell, before the license was issued, came to the distillery and said he was afraid he was trying to get a license out, and could not effect it for want of a proper tenement, and "they said they wanted him to take out the license as a small matter of form, and they would run the distillery and be their own licensees;" he objected; they said it was a mere matter of form; he agreed with Blaisdell to Homer Franklin's office where the signed an application for a license; he thought the papers were really prepared; he thought they went with Eckel to the Collector's office; Blaisdell was there; Blaisdell or Eckel came out of a back room, after a while, and said it was all right—the license would be granted; Blaisdell and Eckel to have nine-tenths, both told him so; he was to receive $2,000 a year, but objected, and Eckel said "he was cheap enough;" out of his own pocket witness never had any interest in the business; Eckel and Blaisdell received the money; before the first seizure he never sold to Blaisdell other whisky was run off at night; Blaisdell told him that the process of carrying whisky to the rectifying-house was not quick enough, and spoke of a better way, by means of a pipe, which was afterward laid from the floor being was in the morning and other superintendent, he judged that whisky had been conveyed to the rectifying-house through the pipe; he would see the receiving-tube in the rectifying-house; on days when he went away at night and in the morning would find them full, or two-thirds full; Blaisdell told him that he and Eckel were going to put up a door for him to secure his property behind; Blaisdell threatened to discharge him for saying he was "doing his duty;" he saw the whisky; he entered bad items at the request of Eckel; those things that he entered were ordered in the name of Blaisdell and Eckel, by their direction; when Eckel ordered the purchase of the hose, he told witness to get pieces of tube that could be joined together in one line, and would fit all the bib-cocks; the day preceding that of the seizure in November Eckel told him that they had notice that place was to be seized, and he had better stop the business; orders to this effect were given the next morning; he found the place running; he and Blaisdell called upon the Collector to run—that they had the inside track; the witness determined mistakenly how the pipe was laid and the connection made complete between the distillery and the rectifying-house; the rectifying-house was built by Blaisdell and Eckel; they issued the requisition and ordered the building. They told witness that they were going to get Diesendorf or Carr but the license as rectifier.

The Court at 4:15 P. M. adjourned till 11 A. M. to-morrow.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT—SOUTHERN DISTRICT.

Before Judge Benedict.

POSTPONEMENT OF THE FULLERTON CASE.

The United States vs. William Fullerton et al.—This case, which was set down for trial yesterday, was called at the opening of Court. Mr. Courtney said that in behalf of the Government he was ready, if his witnesses were in Court. Mr. Seward, one of the counsel for the defence, said that they were not ready; that he himself was quite unwell, and that Mr. Burrill, who had had charge of getting up the testimony, was sick and confined to his bed, and that they were therefore obliged to sue for a postponement.

Mr. Courtney said that the Government were desirous that the defence should have every fair opportunity to prepare for the trial of the cause, and that he could well understand that if the counsel who was sick had had charge of the matter of the evidence in the case, his illness would have prevented them from making the necessary preparation, and he could not, therefore, oppose a reasonable postponement.

The Judge asked how long a time was asked.

Mr. Seward suggested until next Monday.

The Judge said that he was only to sit this week and next, and it would not be well to put it off to so late a day as that it could not be finished.

Both sides appeared to think that it could be finished, if put over till Monday, and it was accordingly postponed till that day.

COUNTERFEITING.

The United States vs. Martin Shack.—The prisoner was charged with passing a two-dollar counterfeit note. His counsel stated that he knew the bill to be bad, but that he was induced to pass it by one of his acquaintances. On account of the circumstances of the case, and of the prisoner's previous character, which appeared to be good, and that he had been but a short time in the country—on the suggestion of the District-Attorney the prisoner was discharged on his own recognizance.

The United States vs. George Myers.—In this case the prisoner was charged with having counterfeit money in his possession with intent to pass it. The testimony showed that in the evening of the 8th of December last the prisoner entered the saloon No. 263 West Twenty-ninth-street, and called for something to drink, in payment for which he offered a counterfeit five-dollar note. The bill was returned, and he paid in good money. There were two police officers not in uniform in the saloon, who saw the bill and followed Myers when he went out. Myers, on seeing them, began to run, when one of the officers gave chase, captured him, and took him to the Station-house. On the way to the Station-house the prisoner attempted to put his hand in his pocket, and when prevented offered to give the officer all the money in his possession to let him go. When searched at the Station-house there was found in his possession not only the bill attempted to be passed, but also three other counterfeit bills together with a quantity of good money. He was therefore held to answer this indictment. The jury found the prisoner guilty, recommending him, however, to the mercy of the Court.

The United States vs. Harrison Shaw.—This was an indictment for perjury. The prisoner was charged with being connected with the conspiracy which attempted last Summer to bring about the removal or indictment of Collector Bailey; and that while endeavoring with others to bring about that result, he made an affidavit before a United States Commissioner charging Bailey with violations of the Internal Revenue laws, which he knew was wholly false.

The prosecution offered in evidence the affidavit made by the prisoner before Commissioner Osborn, and the warrant against Collector Bailey issued thereon. They also called Collector Bailey to corroborate the statements of the affidavit, and proved by Commissioner Stilwell that he took the examination before him Shaw admitted that the statements in his affidavit were false. No evidence was offered by the defence. Mr. Owen and Mr. Rose, who had been assigned as his counsel, took the ground that when Shaw made the affidavit he did not know that it was before a Magistrate, inasmuch as it was taken before Mr. Osborn's clerk, and in Mr. Osborn's office, but in the office of H. A. Dellmap, No. 71 Broadway, and that it did not appear that he was sworn on the Gospels, as alleged in the indictment. The case was submitted to the jury on the charge of the Judge.

SUPREME COURT—CITY OF NEW-YORK.

THE BARGE ACROSS BROADWAY—A SUIT AGAINST THE CITY TO RECOVER $25,000 DAMAGES.

James E. Nolan vs. the Mayor, &c., of New-York.—The complaint of the plaintiff in this action is to the effect that he, plaintiff, has a lease of the premises in the basement on the south-westerly corner of Broadway and Fulton-street; that he has a lease of the same from James N. Jaques for the term of five years from the 1st of May, 1866, at the yearly rent of $7,750; that his business is that of a licensed wine and liquor dealer and proprietor of a free-and-easy saloon; that in June, 1866, the defendants, by resolution duly passed, directed their Street Commissioners to erect an aerial bridge for pedestrians at the intersection of Broadway and Fulton-street; that such bridge was erected and finally completed about the 1st of May, 1867; that it was continued there until the 1st of January, 1869; that the bridge was a nuisance, and has been so adjudged by this Court; that hence the erection and continuance of the same was a trespass by the defendants upon the rights and interests of the plaintiff; that the latter has sustained great loss and damage from the obstruction of the sidewalk in front of his place, and the deprivation of light and air; that prior to the erection of the bridge the receipts of plaintiff from his business were as much as $1,000 per week; after the erection, his receipts were not more than $150 per week, and plaintiff represents to the Court that, in consequence of defendants' wrongful acts, he has sustained losses to the extent of $900 per week, net profits, from the 1st of May, 1867, to Jan. 1, 1869, amounting in the whole to the sum of at least $26,000. Moreover, he has been obliged to sell his lease and fixtures at a loss of $10,000; wherefore he prays judgment for the sum of $35,000 against the City.

For plaintiff, Mr. A. B. Sage.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—BROOKLYN.

Before Judge Gilbert.

A COSTLY SUIT.

Daniel H. Baldwin & Co., vs. Nathaniel L. Blanchard, John L. Posey, James S. Southworth, Robert S. Darrow, Henry McClellan and T. B. Blanchard.—The plaintiffs in this case sue to recover advances and commissions on cotton shipments and commission agents. They allege that the defendants procured them to ship cotton of a burned and damaged quality to England, representing that they had a thousand bales ready for that purpose, and were being picked and cleaned. Baldwin & Co. shipped 600 bales, procured warehouse room for them, and advanced to Blanchard $17,000, more than they ever received on the balance in store, when it was destroyed by fire. This over advance was never paid. Mr. Baldwin, of the plaintiffs, testified that one of the defendants, E. B. Blanchard, came to him in April, 1866, and stated that he and defendants had about 1,000 bales of burnt and damaged cotton which they were then cleaning, and wished a shipper for, and asked if they would find a market. References were exchanged, and after awhile Baldwin & Co. consented to be the shippers. They began by small shipments first to see how the market would be—shipping twenty or fifty bales at a time to Liverpool, Havre, Antwerp, Hamburg, England, until finally they had shipped 268 bales of the total of 1,000 bales in store, and had advanced to Blanchard & Co., some $17,000 over and above the remittances received from England on the 268 bales. At this stage of the enterprise, the balance in store was destroyed by fire, and Baldwin & Co. never could realize their advances and commissions. The defendant, Baldwin, testifies to having received some $4,000 from the defendant McClellan, as the latter's share of the claim. The plaintiffs claim that the defendants were all partners in the enterprise of shipments and sales, and that Blanchard & Co. acted as agents.

The defendants, all but the Blanchards, deny all knowledge of the contract of the Blanchards to have the cotton shipped, and that they were partners only in the picking and cleaning of the cotton, which Blanchard & Son were employed to do, that being their business. They claim that Baldwin & Co. sold their cotton for account and at their risk, and return a recognition of $60,000. They deny any partnership on the part of the Blanchards.

The testimony for the plaintiffs was finished yesterday afternoon, and Mr. Capwell opened for the defense, after which the Court adjourned until to-day, when the witnesses for the defence will be called. Evarts, Choate & Southmayd for plaintiffs, and Messrs. Capwell & Van Cott for defendants.

CITY COURT OF BROOKLYN.

Before Judge Thompson.

A RIVER-STREET NUISANCE.

Julia Ann Baker vs. Joseph Glen and George Murray.—This is a suit for damages to the amount of $1,500, the amount of injury which plaintiff claims was done to her property by the too close proximity of a hat factory, recently erected and set in operation by defendants. It appears that George Murray owns certain land in River-street, near Flushing and Classon avenues; that in April last he leased that land to Joseph Glen, who then built thereon a shanty, with long boards and short boards, making, altogether, a very unhandsome looking structure; that in addition to this, the process of hat manufacturing, as carried on there, caused certain smoke and steam, which were deleterious to health, and thereby the value of plaintiff's property was greatly depreciated. Mr. Giles, deponent, testified that he was 60 years old, had been a hatter for fifty years, and was in perfect health. The defence claim that the hat factories are nuisances to nobody but rats, bedbugs, leather factories, and swamps, that abound in the neighborhood. The case will be given to the Jury to-day.

A. H. Dailey for plaintiff; Fisher and Semler for defendants.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The Corps Legislatif was opened yesterday by the Emperor NAPOLEON, who made a speech from the throne. He said the Legislatif was called upon to conduct a Government strong enough to repress the excesses while accepting the benefits of liberty. He congratulated the country on being well prepared for either peace or war, but thought the present peaceful relations of the Government would be preserved. He stated that the Peace Conference, which had just concluded its sessions, had agreed upon a plan which would extinguish a conflict which had become imminent. If this were accomplished, nothing would be left to trouble the harmony of nations. He congratulated the country, also, on the harmony which existed between the throne, the Legislature and the people.

The Sublime Porte has authorized the representative of Turkey to sign the protocol agreed upon by the Peace Conference, and it is thought Greece will also accept it.

Prince AMADEUS, Duke of Aosta, has, it is reported, renounced the succession to the Italian throne in favor of the Princess CLOTILDE.

The safe arrival of the Captain and crew of the British ship Southern Empire at London is announced. This vessel was reported to have foundered at sea recently while making the voyage between New-Orleans and Liverpool, and all hands were supposed to have been lost.

CONGRESS.

A number of petitions and memorials were presented to the Senate yesterday, and referred to committees. Among these was one signed by a great number of merchants and bankers of the principal cities, requesting that hereafter all sales of bonds and bonds of the United States on Government account shall be made by inviting public competition, and that all sales of gold shall be made at auction. Referred to the Committee on Finance. Mr. SHERMAN reported from the Finance Committee a bill legalizing coin contracts. It appropriates one hundred and forty millions annually out of the Custom receipts, to be applied to the payment of the interest and reduction from the principal of the public debt, in lieu of the sinking fund heretofore authorized. A provision is made for a change of legal-tender notes for five per cent. ten-forty gold bonds; gold notes to be issued to the amount of coin in the Treasury for the purchase of six per cent. securities in the City of New-York; but the amount of such notes shall only equal the amount of legal notes surrendered for bonds. The last section authorizes banks to issue demand notes, payable in coin to the extent of sixty-five per cent. on bonds deposited by them, regardless of the present limitation of three hundred millions. Messrs. HARLAN, POMEROY, GRIMES, and others, made personal explanations in reference to some newspaper attacks recently made upon them. The bill to regulate the duty on copper was taken up, and a lengthy debate ensued. Without disposing of the bill, the Senate adjourned.

In the House, under the call of States, a large number of bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read twice, and referred to committees. A resolution was adopted directing the Committee on Public Expenditures to investigate the terms of the contract made with WELLS, FARGO & Co. for the transportation of the overland mails, and the manner of its fulfillment. Mr. NOLAN offered a resolution setting forth in the present condition of national finances Congress ought not to vote any more subsidies in bonds or money to railroad corporations or local enterprises, but that the whole resources of the country should be so directed as to relieve the people from the burdens of taxation. A second resolution declares that the public lands should be held as sacred trusts to give homesteads to actual settlers. Mr. NOLAN moved the previous question, which was seconded. The vote was taken on the first resolution, which was adopted—yeas, 93, nays 37. The second resolution was laid on the table—yeas 110, nays 54. The Navy Appropriation Bill was then taken up. Several amendments were adopted, and the bill was passed. Mr. BUTLER offered a resolution directing the Comptroller of the Currency to report to the House what National Banks had been allowed to exchange gold-bearing interest bonds for the currency bonds issued to the Pacific Railroads; also, what banks had relinquished their charters as National Banks, and were doing business under State charters, still retaining their circulation as National Banks. The resolution provoked considerable debate, Mr. DELANO contending that it was a direct attack upon the Comptroller of the Currency. Mr. BUTLER defended his resolution, and it was adopted. Mr. BOUTWELL reported from the Committee on Reconstruction the Senate joint resolution, providing that persons now holding office under the Provisional Governments of Virginia and Texas, who cannot take the test oath, shall be removed, and the vacancies filled by the District Commanders. An amendment recommended by the Committee provides that the resolution shall not affect those officers who have been relieved from their political disabilities, and that the act shall take effect thirty days after its passage. The amendment was agreed to and the resolution passed. The House went into Committee of the Whole on the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, and was addressed by Mr. WOOD on the powers of Congress to legislate on many of the measures now before it. When the Committee rose, Mr. FARNSWORTH made a personal explanation relative to statements published in Chicago papers regarding his opposition to the investigation of the overland mail contracts. The House then adjourned.

GENERAL.

The confessions of ARNOLD and AZERODT, two of the parties to the conspiracy which resulted in the assassination of President LINCOLN, are now published for the first time. The confession of ARNOLD was made voluntarily, in Baltimore, on the 18th of April, 1865, in the office of General MCPHAIL, and that of AZERODT in his cell at Washington, on the night before his execution.

Gov. BROWNLOW, of Tennessee, has issued a proclamation calling on the people of the State to enroll themselves in the militia, for the purpose of protecting themselves from the KLUKS. He also announces that as soon as the militia is organized, under the new law just passed by the Legislature, he shall declare martial law in those counties of Western Tennessee wherein the marauders are operating, and take measures to put an end to their work at once.

Considerable trouble occurred at Hayes City, Kansas, last week, in consequence of some arrests made by Col. RYLEAN, commanding Fort Hayes. On Tuesday night he sent a guard into the town with instructions to arrest every person found up after 9 o'clock. The guard accordingly entered a ball-room and arrested fifty-one persons, whom they kept locked in the guard-house all night. An indignation meeting was subsequently held and Col. RYLEAN severely denounced. The matter was brought to the attention of the Legislature, and great excitement prevailed.

Senator MORRILL, of Maine, has published a card withdrawing from the Senatorial contest in that State. He says that while he does not think the recent action of the caucus conclusive, he would embarrass many of his friends by continuing the struggle.

A fire in Milton, Vt., on Saturday, destroyed the large wooden block owned by R. L. WHITNEY, containing the Central House and several stores, and also the dwelling-house and lumber-yard of LYMAN BURNHAM. The total loss is estimated at about $20,000. On the night of Friday the Williston Academy, in Williston, Vt., was entirely destroyed by fire. Loss about $8,000.

Mr. JOHN WILBERHOF, a farmer residing five miles west of the village of Rome, Oneida County, and his son and two daughters, all adults, have died since Dec. 18 of trichinosis. Five other members of his family and of the family of his son-in-law are ill of the same disease, some of them in a very critical condition. The disease was caused by pork raised by Mr. WILBERHOF, and fattened on corn and grain; but the family had eaten sausages made of the raw meat, smoked until quite black and dry.

Hon. THEODORE F. RANDOLPH, Democrat, will be inaugurated Governor of New-Jersey, at Trenton, to-day.

In the case of the proprietors of the Indianapolis Journal, charged with contempt of Court, in having published the evidence in the recent Clem murder trial there, in violation of an order of the Court prohibiting such publication, a decision has been given. The defendants' counsel had moved the Court to quash the proceedings, on the ground that it had no rightful authority to make such order. The Judge overruled the motion.

The Board of Health met yesterday afternoon. The typhus fever and small-pox were reported to be prevalent in certain filthy quarters on the eastern side of the City. It was ordered that the swill milk vended by Brooklyn dealers be investigated, in order to see if the ingredients are injurious to health, so that legal action may be taken if necessary.

The funeral of Inspector JAMES LEONARD took place yesterday, the services being performed at St. Ann's Church, in Eighteenth-street, by Rev. Dr. GALLAUDET, assisted by Rev. Drs. PRIME and BENEDICT.

Three very pleasant balls occurred last evening, one of the Manhattan Club, at Irving Hall, another of Dodd's Express employes, at Lyric Hall, and the last at Germania Hall. This was a masked affair, and was given by the Colonia Singing Society. All were very well attended and lively.

A boy, 16 years of age, named STEPHEN B. DOWNS, committed suicide, yesterday morning, at the residence of his mother in Brooklyn, by shooting himself.

FREDERICK DOUGLASS delivered his lecture on "William the Silent," last evening, at the Cooper Institute. The weather was bad and the hall was not entirely filled.

Cotton was dull and lower yesterday. Very moderate dealings were reported in most kinds of Breadstuffs and Provisions, without any notable changes in values, save of Lard and Hogs, which were cheaper. Groceries in request. Freights quite dull.

There was less activity yesterday in the live-stock markets than usual. Sales of beef cattle were slow at 14c.@16¾c. ℔ lb., net weight, with occasional extra-fed bullocks at 17c. Prices were acknowledged to be ¼c. lower than one week ago. The sheep trade is also dull, with declining prices. Most of the sales were made at about 6c.@6c. ℔ lb., live weight, or at intermediate prices represented by fractions of cents, between 5c.@6c. A few selected sheep brought 6¾c.@7¼c. ℔ lb. The supply is sufficiently large to meet the requirements of the trade. Swine are not in as good request as they were last week. Scarcely any are sold alive. Most of the sales of dressed hogs were made at about 13½c.@14c. ℔ lb. A few lots were reported at 14¼c. @14¾c. ℔ lb. Prime milch cows will sell at satisfactory prices, while inferior milking cows are not wanted at any price. Fair cows will sell readily at $70@$80 ℔ head.

The Indian War—End of the Campaign.

Indians sometimes have a disagreable way of not staying whipped, whereby more than once the report of "All quiet on the Platte" has been the cue for a bold raid or savage butchery. But this time there is ground for putting faith in Gen. SHERMAN's claim that he has "broken the backbone of the Indian rebellion"—broken it, we may trust, not in the sense in which the Confederate backbone was broken at regular intervals during the war, but in the Petersburg and Five Forks sense.

Three tribes have been mainly engaged in the Indian hostilities, i. e., the series beginning with the conflicts on Solomon and Saline Creeks last Summer. These three are the Cheyennes, Arapahoes and Comanches. The two former were thoroughly cowed by CUSTER's terrible blow on the Washita,—which blotted out Black Kettle's camp and annihilated his band; the third has now been terror-stricken by EWART's "wiping-out" of the Comanche village. It was rather rude pastime for Christmas Day; but it has had quite as much effect on what SHERMAN calls "the Indian rebellion," as did SHERMAN's "Christmas gift" of Savannah on its great prototype. At all events, one-and-twenty prominent hostile chiefs presented themselves, it appears, at Fort Cobb,—the trysting-place of peace—"at 12 o'clock on the night of the 31st," to make "unconditional surrender." It was a very good way of "seeing the old year out and the new year in;" and we may hope, as the result, a happier year to come on the Plains.

Regarding the campaign as closed, and so reviewing it, we must concede that the army has thus far justified its theory that the best way to make peace with the hostile Indians is to give them a sound threshing to begin with, and so put them at disadvantage—making them sue for peace, instead of us. It is too early to determine whether the lull in hostilities will be lasting; but we have as certain results of the Winter's campaign, the destruction of the very band that began hostilities, all the hostile tribes "in mourning for their losses, their people starving, their dogs all eaten, and no buffalo;" some of the worst warriors on the Plains killed, and others captured; and, in general, the hostile Indians begging for peace. This having been accomplished by the army, it now remains for Congress to take its turn, as it effectually can, by transferring the Indian Bureau to the War Department, and perfecting a broad and intelligent Indian policy, based on the principle of reservations.

England's Place in Europe.

The recent troubles in the East have probably opened the eyes of many Englishmen to the altered position of their country in relation to the other European Powers. The nature of the quarrel between Greece and Turkey, and the weakness of the Power which in Europe at least is unjustly considered to be the aggressor, has secured the absolute neutrality of Great Britain. There was a time when she willingly incurred the risk of a great war in order to preserve the integrity of the Ottoman Empire, but the people now perceive that the object was not worth the expenditure of blood and treasure which it cost. England will not take up arms to save Turkey again. Certainly she was not expected to do so in the present instance, but what must have struck most people is the fact that her opinion seems to have been considered a matter of no moment, on one side or the other. Nor is this the first example that has occurred of an indifference to the Power which in the early part of this century seemed to be mistress of Europe. After Napoleon's fall England could scarcely be said to have a formidable rival. But from that period her decline has been manifest, until now her opinions have little or no influence upon events outside her own dominions. It may be worth while to inquire into the causes of this change.

In the first place, it is obvious that England has not attempted for many years past to hold her former place in Europe. She has deliberately withdrawn herself from the front rank, which must necessarily be occupied by nations not constitutionally averse from an appeal to arms. The Second Empire soon cast England into the shade as a military Power, and her naval supremacy has passed away in the progress of her old rivals. Any one may see how much greater is the influence of Prussia in these days than that of Great Britain. The prestige of recent victories has, of course, a good deal to do with this. Nations respect a Power which has proved itself capable of striking a hard and dangerous blow. France and Prussia together have wholly deprived England of a preponderating influence. But this is partly England's own act. The policy of non-intervention has been pursued by successive Governments quite long enough to show that it is confirmed by the people. They have seen what is the end of wars undertaken for the "regeneration" of other nations, or for the preservation of the balance of power, and they have decided that the experiment should not be tried again. In this respect England's example ought never to be forgotten by nations of more recent growth. She has many times gone to war for an idea, and how much the better is the world for her sacrifices? She crushed the first NAPOLEON, only to consolidate the power of an equally arbitrary, if less ambitious ruler, in his nephew. She settled some questions for a time, but they were very soon reopened. She has flung herself against Russian aggression, and yet the Russians are upon the confines of her Eastern Empire. We need not feel surprised that the English people should have resolved to renounce a policy so fraught with evil to themselves, and so entirely unproductive of good results to any one else.

It seems to be essential to the position of a first-rate Power in Europe that it should be understood to be always ready for war, hence the industrial energies of several nations are at this moment severely taxed for the maintenance of huge armaments. But it is now recognized that England does not stand prepared for war. She holds herself aloof from the jealousies of her neighbors. She devotes herself more and more to the repair of the waste of her former rulers. Her energies are blunted by the pressure of a heavy debt. People who look into the facts stand aghast when they see the levy which is made upon all classes for the sustenance of the Government. Besides the drain of imperial taxation, a further depletion is always going on in the form of local rates. When a man sees that he has mortgaged his estate to the last limit, and that his expenditure is nearly shrewd of his income, he begins to retrench. England is very much in that position. She could not go on making wars. In these days she cannot hope to be ruler of the seas. Her present ambition appears, indeed, to be in a very different direction. She begins to think of the education of her children, and the proper treatment of her immense pauper population.

The growing strength of the people in the government of the country adds very materially to these potent forces. Without going so far as to say that foreign wars are impossible under a popular Government, we think it must be conceded that they are likely to be of infrequent occurrence when it is the taxpayer who decides whether peace shall be preserved or broken. The interests of the great body of the people are opposed to unnecessary wars, but an aristocratic clique do not always stop to consider these interests—in many instances they may altogether fail to understand them. At present England has an army which is essentially an aristocratic institution, although it is recruited from the ranks of the people. It is officered almost exclusively by the wealthy or upper classes. In the face of a democratic suffrage such an anomaly as this cannot be of long continuance, but in past times it had its influence in betraying England into wars. We see now a Government called into existence directly by the people, and pledged to a course of economy and social reform. It is impossible that one of the Ministers, whose presence in the Cabinet is an immense advantage to Mr. GLADSTONE, should ever assent to any war which is not strictly defensive in its character. Mr. BRIGHT could not be a member of a Government which flew to arms on the slightest provocation. It is important to observe that England must shape her diplomacy in conformity with her altered circumstances. Lord ROSSLYN's favorite plan of intermeddling all over the world, must be heard of no more. The English people must learn that they can only enjoy the blessings of peace by ceasing to aggravate foreign Powers.

It is scarcely necessary to say that we cast no doubt on England's capacity to defend herself against unjust attack. The loss, in fact, she adventures upon Quixotic wars, the better prepared will she be to protect her own interest when due occasion arises. In this respect the example of America cannot fail to impress the English people. We do not make war wantonly, but we are not prepared to submit to indignities from Powers which have now nothing left to boast of over us but their greater age.

There are, however, many circumstances which render England more liable to be drawn into foreign wars than we can ever be. She has remote dependencies, all of them looking to her for military aid, and one of them requiring the presence of a standing army of at least eighty thousand men. India cannot be given up, and it is quite clear that the English rule will never be accepted by the natives in any other light than as an infliction imposed upon them by a stronger Power. In Canada, British troops are thought to be indispensable, and the proposed withdrawal of 12,000 men by the Government would tend to alienate the sympathies of the Canadians from the mother country more than any event which has happened of recent years. In New-Zealand the Maories are constantly giving fresh trouble, and but recently the news of a dreadful massacre committed by them has caused a painful sensation in England.

These are among the causes which oblige England to keep up large armaments. But, even at the worst, her policy of non-intervention must save her from many a strain upon her resources. The new Government are pledged to economy, as few Governments have been before, and it is not compatible with this course to assert a right to decide the quarrels of all Europe. England has lost her old place, but she may possibly be able to allay the discontent and disorder of her own people.

The Alabama Protocol—The Case Before the Senate.

The long diplomatic struggle over the Alabama claims is substantially ended. Lord CLARENDON and Minister JOHNSON have agreed upon and signed, in behalf of their respective Governments, a Convention for the settlement of all claims arising between the two Governments since the treaty of 1853; this convention is on its way across the ocean; and meanwhile a telegraphed copy has been forwarded by the President to the Senate for consideration. If approved by that body, the formal ratifications will be promptly exchanged, and the treaty of settlement will become binding and final.

It is not too much to say that, upon the whole, the terms of the protocol are eminently favorable to the United States. Not only are they based upon the original instructions delivered to Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON as representing the demands of his Government, but they contain all those amendments (or counter-propositions) made by Mr. SEWARD to the protocol drawn up and signed in November by Lord STANLEY and Minister JOHNSON. In other words, every material point made by the Department of State has been conceded substantially in the form in which it was submitted.

The Clarendon-Johnson Convention provides, in the first place, for a mixed Commission to settle all claims, in place of the foreign arbitration originally proposed by Lord STANLEY. A foreign arbiter could in any case have settled the general question of liability in the Alabama claims, leaving that of specific damages still to go before a Joint Commission. Mr. SEWARD's proposition that both questions should go before the same tribunal is now substantially acceded to.

In the next place, the Convention embraces in its scope all claims which have been presented to either Government for its interposition with the other since the treaty of 1853—a provision of mutual advantage, as settling or barring all outlying claims in the past, and giving a clean slate for the future. In like manner, the Convention of '53 between Lord RUSSELL and J. F. INGERSOLL, stretched back over all unsettled claims between that and the treaty of Ghent, signed in 1814—but no further. The year 1869 will thus be a starting-point for the next claims' treaty of the future. However, Mr. SEWARD has carried, it seems, after much difficulty, two important exclusory provisions, whereof the first excepts from the jurisdiction of the Commission all claims already finally decided by the Admiralty Courts, while the other excepts all claims, growing out of the war, of British subjects who cannot prove their neutrality to the satisfaction of the Commission. He has also successfully enforced his objection to the the classification of claims made in the November protocol, and has procured that the Alabama claims shall go under the same head with all others, and be put in the same class.

The next main point carried by our Government relates to the decisions of the Joint Commission. This body, as is now well known, is to consist of four persons, two appointed by each Government. The November protocol required an unanimous decision to substantiate the Alabama and Shenandoah claims, but only a majority decision for the others. This, of course, could not be agreed to. The State Department demanded that the same rule should apply to all claims; and it further submitted that a majority decision should be sufficient for each case. This, with reluctance, was conceded.

Next came the question of providing for the case of a tie vote. The Department of State made the condition, as against the November protocol, that the selection of the arbiter by the two Governments, in such a case, should be subject to the ratification of the Senate; and this is now agreed to. However, if this last is not done within six months after a case is so reported, each party in the Commission selects the name of an arbiter, and the decision is made by lot. We need hardly add that the great question involving this point is most likely to be, whether Her Majesty's Government shall be all of for the Alabama's escape and depredations. That settled, all the rest is plain sailing.

As to the minor points of the protocol—the time of filing, deciding and paying claims, the expenses of the Commission, the agreement for fair and final decision, and what not—these details are common to all similar diplomatic documents, and call for no comment just now.

Taking all these concessions, together with the change of plan of sitting from London to Washington, our Government has reason to be well satisfied, upon the whole, with its persistent action in this hotly-contested diplomatic struggle. Without seeking to forecast the action of the Senate, it is yet clear that the protracted controversy is well-nigh over. That any other than a peaceful solution could come of it, has been, of course, at least since the Summer of 1865, preposterous. Nevertheless, such were the questions of national possible involved, that we may be very well content that the long-drawn affair is practically ended.

Mr. Wells and the Monopolists.

War against the Commissioner of Revenue is declared by journals and lobby agents in the interest of those who clamor for a prohibitory tariff. His report is the immediate cause of the hostility. It handles the question of revenue, and the question of production and consumption intelligently, and that is an offence not to be forgiven. It exposes the unprofitableness of monopoly, its injustice to the people, its depressing effect upon industrial skill and development; and for this service its author is to be punished. It shows that by the simplification of the tariff, and the adoption of a policy which has yielded remarkable results in England, the Treasury might be greatly benefited, while the great body of the community would obtain an increase of comfort and prosperity. It proves that the refusal to reestablish reciprocity with the British Provinces has been followed by an enhanced cost of articles which enter into universal use; a very limited class reaping advantage.

If these were unsupported assertions on the part of the Commissioner, he might doubtless hope for pardon. But he is a man of facts and principles—not of theories and assertions. And it is because his report is an armory of facts, brought together after impartial and exhaustive study and observation, and presented in a manner clear and cogent, that the advocates of monopoly raise the cry for vengeance. This Mr. WELLS, they say, is too strong and effective as a worker to be tolerated. Had he made his office a sinecure, or had he thrown together a heap of fallacies in defence of monopoly by way of a report, his assailants would have loaded him with praise. He has chosen another course, and is now menaced with their displeasure. Nothing less than his head will appease their anger. And if direct decapitation be for any reason undesirable, the end—it is suggested—may be reached by abolishing the office. Any plan will do, provided Mr. WELLS be got off the track!

For the credit of Congress and the party which is responsible for its action, we trust that the proceeding talked of will be abandoned. Neither can afford to surrender itself bodily into the hands of the small but unitedly powerful class for whose benefit the present tariff was made in many respects excessive, and who are the chief abettors of the Moorhead scheme. For though the requirements of a sound fiscal system are, in the abstract, little understood, the effect of the existing revenue arrangements upon the welfare of the community begins to be appreciated. The facts chronicled by Mr. WELLS will remain, whether he continue Commissioner or not. He is not the inventor of the process he traces, by which the disparity between rich and poor yearly becomes greater. He simply records the tendency of things, and suggests the wisdom of arresting it before greater danger arise. His removal, therefore, will not help the monopolists. They may drive out Mr. WELLS, but they cannot expel from the public mind the conviction that in the construction of the tariff as it is, and in the changes contemplated during this session, general interests are sacrificed to special interests. The mass of consumers know to their cost that the high prices of essential commodities, produced by a prohibitory system, are indicative of a depressed condition of general trade; that while every individual's expenditure is increased, the ability to meet it is seriously lessened. They understand perfectly that the system from which they suffer entails loss upon the Treasury, and indeed has no other purpose or result than the aggrandizement of particular classes, to whose demands undue importance is attached by Congress.

The contest is not solely between the many and the few; it is also a contest between sections. The old antagonism between North and South perished, it is to be hoped, with the rebellion in which it culminated. But there are signs of another difference in which the East and the West will figure as contending sections. We think with the Tribune that every attempt to foment strife on this basis should be condemned. The most effective method of averting it is, however, that by which causes of difference shall be removed; and no better step can be taken in this direction than by discarding extravagant tariff-duties and refusing compliance with the wishes of those who, under the pretence of protecting industry, would build up monopolies. The interest of the West is identical with the interest of the East, so far as the people are concerned; but the former holds the latter responsible for legislation by which the cost of living is artificially enhanced. Nowhere, we believe, is any unwillingness expressed to the rational and moderate protection which is compatible with the greatest possible productiveness of revenue. The ultra free-traders do not, perhaps, outnumber the ultra protectionists, and it is desirable to discard both while the financial exigencies of the country remain as they are. The politic course is that which, in the adjustment of the tariff, shall satisfy the requirements of the Government, and at the same time afford the incidental advantage to manufacturing industry which seems essential in the midst of the disadvantages under which our people labor as a consequence of the war. Judicious adherence to this policy will contribute more than aught else to the extinction of jealous feeling between East and West, and will secure a larged comfort to the people of both. As against these considerations, the claims of monopolists should possess little weight.

Mr. WELLS is the official exponent of this equitable middle course, and as such enjoys the confidence of the country. His labors have vindicated the creation of the office whose duties he has performed with signal faithfulness and ability; and Congress will best comply with the populse will by preparing for the adoption of the views he has presented. They are as just as they are expedient, and no combination can permanently prevent their application.

The Latest Phase of the Eastern Question.

A new and somewhat startling light on the real dangers of the situation in the East of Europe is thrown by the cable intelligence of yesterday. Trouble, it appears, has broken out between Turkey and Persia, the Ambassador of the former Power has been withdrawn from Teheran, and Persian troops have been massed on the Turkish frontier. This is the very first intimation that we have yet had of a matter that is not only important in itself, but which may, it is to be feared, be regarded as an evil omen for the peace of Europe. Although the language of the telegrams giving accounts of the proceedings of the Paris Conference is on the whole calculated to inspire confidence in the preservation of peace, the extraordinary hardihood of Greece in provoking the resentment of Turkey, and the reserve and reticence of Russia are still matters susceptible of very unfavorable interpretation. Greece, it is thought in many quarters, would never have gone as far as she has done unless sure, in the last resort, of Russian support. And now that Persia has so suddenly appeared on the scene in an aggressive attitude, the inference that the influence of Russia has been secretly used in order to stir up a general movement against Turkish rule becomes almost irresistible. Persia long ago succumbed to Russian force and Russian intrigue, and is now, for all practical purposes, a mere tool in the hands of the Czar. She has lost many of her fairest Provinces at the hands of the Muscovite aggressor, and her people have never yet shown anything like the pride of race which has inspired the Turks, under corresponding circumstances, to dispute every inch on the battle-field rather than yield to the invader. There is no doubt, in fact, that, either by threats or by bribes, the power of Persia, such as it is, is controlled in reality from St. Petersburg. At the present juncture, consequently, it is an ominous sign that difficulties should have occurred between Turkey and Persia, at the instance, apparently, of the latter.

It must be recollected, too, that while Persia, the mass of her people belonging to a different sect of Mohammedan religion from that which embraces the Turks, has no intimate ties to bind her to the support of the Ottoman Empire, she has also a special grudge against England, the main upholder of that Power, in consequence of the force exercised by the latter to obtain redress for alleged grievances some twelve years ago. Under these circumstances, it is impossible to regard the action of Persia as entirely unconnected with the influence of the great enemy of Turkey, or the resentment naturally felt by an Oriental Power toward a country from which it has received the humiliation experienced at the hands of England.

Persia can not have moved without the application of some external influence, and that influence can only have been that of Russia. We must wait for further details of the affair before pronouncing an opinion as to its actual importance, or its immediate causes, but we cannot help fearing that it bodes no good to the peace of Europe.

MINOR TOPICS.

The President yesterday sent to the Senate a reply to its request for information as to the authority by which he issued his recent proclamation of amnesty. He simply refers the Senate to the Constitution,—which will hardly be considered a satisfactory answer to the request. He also accompanies his letter with a list of historical precedents, three of which are precedents made by himself.

A petition signed by a large number of the leading business men of New-York, Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago, was presented yesterday to the Senate, praying for the passage of a law providing that hereafter all purchases or sales of Government bonds, on Government account, shall be by public competition, after thorough advertising, and that all sales of Government gold shall be at public auction after due advertisement, by an authorized official of the Treasury. We should think such a law would be passed as the best means of preventing the scandals, most of them false, that are raised from time to time about the Treasury operations in this City.

A number of financial propositions were yesterday introduced to Congress,—the most important of them being that of Senator SHERMAN, which will be found reported at length in the Senate proceedings. Senator MORRILL also introduced a bill in reference to the sale of Government bonds and gold. Mr. POLAND, in the House, also introduced a bill relating to the issue of bonds, the retiring of notes, and the establishment of a free system of national banking.

In another column will be found a reply from Mr. FARGO, President of the American Merchants' Union Express Company, to the statement made in the McVicker complaint which was published in our columns of Saturday last. The complaint alleges that the concern is bankrupt, whereas Mr. FARGO, in the card referred to, asserts that it has more than five millions of dollars on hand and is without indebtedness.

A Washington correspondent of the Worcester Spy has the following paragraph:

Franking Monopoly.—The friends of the bill restricting the franking privilege state that last Summer thousands of copies of the New-York TRIBUNE, containing a prospectus of that journal, were sent off from this City, under the frank of a distinguished member of the House.

Without wishing to be in the least impertinent, we beg to quote a question which the Tribune asked the other day, in the case of Congressman CARX, who had franked "a newspaper" sent to Columbus, Ohio: "Does he frankly call this stealing, or has he a softer name for the same thing?"

The Board of Health urges the use of steam for drawing cars on our City Railroads, and says:

"In this age of mechanical ingenuity it is not too much to hope that steam, in some modified form, or some motive power like caloric or electricity, but more manageable than steam, may be applied to the transportation of passengers in public vehicles."

That may be;—but it is "too much to hope" that our enlightened City authorities will consent to its use. There are methods already devised by which steam could be used on our railroad cars,—thus quadrupling the power of those roads to accommodate the public without the slightest danger to anybody or anything. Three days' use of it would dissipate all apprehensions on the subject. One of our East-side roads attempted it the other day, and forthwith an enlightened City guardian brought forward a resolution to stop it! Every attempt at progress or improvement is thus squelched by the very authority that ought to encourage it. Possibly the millennium will come at some time or other; but, until it does, our City authorities will continue to be—what they are.

Mayor HALL seems to be working far more energetically than the Police authorities in forming agencies to bear for securing the murderer of Mr. ROSENA. If he had had the disposition of a Police force in this case, we are inclined to think we should have had better results than we can now boast of.

If Mr. BUCHANAN's success in England at first seemed slow, his mission has borne fruit there very quickly. Not only has he come to an agreement with the British Government as to the basis for a new policy toward China, but Lord CLARENDON has instructed the British agents in China to carry out that policy and to sanction all British subjects to pay due respect not only to the laws of China, but to the usages and feelings of the Chinese people. The basis agreed upon, as given in the London papers, is as follows:

"First, that it is necessary to observe existing treaty stipulations; secondly, that all negotiations should be conducted with the Central Government at Peking, and not with provincial authorities; and thirdly, that, when any differences arise, before war shall ensue, they shall be referred to the home Government for consideration."

There are now the best hopes that Mr. BUCHANAN will succeed in negotiating satisfactory treaties with all the Governments of Europe.

The Evening Post says that HORACE GREELEY was at Albany on Saturday, working all day for the election of a Senatorial candidate whom he had previously called a "liar." This is nothing remarkable; for if he were to refuse to support all the men whom he has called "liars," he would hardly be able to find anybody whom he could sustain for any office. But it must, after all, be a frightful business.

During nine months of the past year there were 11,671 deaths in tenement houses, out of a total of less than 30,000 in the City. The causes of this excessive mortality are to be found in the bad arrangements for living, for air, and other necessary conditions of health, which are provided in that class of houses. Suits have been commenced against 3,289 owners or agents of such houses for not complying with the law in regard to them. These suits ought to be pressed to trial. The law is not severe,—it only enjoins upon the owners such provisions as are absolutely necessary for the health and comfort of their tenants; and the only possible way in which tenants can secure these advantages is through the operation of the law, which ought, therefore, to be rigidly enforced. The profit on dwellings of this class is large enough to warrant the enforcement of very stringent regulations.

The Cincinnati Commercial, which of old made so many points about Senator WADE, has just made a new one. All last Spring, and up to the Chicago Convention, that gentleman was conceded to be "the old war-horse of Republicanism." One biographer even declared that, on a certain occasion, he "snorted out an opinion." But, be that as it may, it was admitted, we repeat, that Senator WADE was an "old war-horse;" and yet here comes in the Commercial with the declaration that "Ben WADE is the old wheel-horse of the organization." Here, then, is a doubt. Which is he—the old war-horse or the old wheel-horse? for (though Pegasus once went in harness) he can hardly be both at once. One point is clear, that he is some kind of a horse, even though he can't "talk horse;" and hence, as Gen. GRANT has a partiality for that animal, here is obviously a fine chance to get a war (or wheel) horse in to his Cabinet.

It begins to seem like old times when we have HENRY A. WISE writing long letters, plentifully garnished with italics, capitals and exclamation points, on questions of constitutional law, State rights, and the greatness and glory of old Virginia and her sons. He has just published one such, which will be found in another column. We give it place, not because of any special importance it may have on current politics, but as a curiosity and an illustration of how little a man may be changed, in temper and in manner, by a four years' rebellion ending in total ruin. Mr. WISE is unalterably opposed to the compromise scheme for reconstructing the State, now urged at Washington by some of the most able and influential of her conservative citizens. He refuses to be restored to his political rights in any such way. The Governor is for "death" rather than "dishonor"—just as he was at the outbreak of the rebellion. He proposes to "fold his arms and wait" for what may happen. He wants to be hanged as a traitor, if the United States can get a little leisure for the operation, rather than be "saved from execution by the fus bell." And so he goes on declaring his preferences for one thing over another, for a solid column; but as nobody cares very much what he prefers, it was scarcely worth his while to promise to write another letter upon the subject, in which to explain himself more at length.

We read every day of men being robbed of large sums of money which they were carrying in their pockets, or about their persons in some way. We are inclined to think it serves them right. When it is so easy to obtain a check or draft or some other document by which money may be transferred from one city to another, without the slightest risk of loss, we cannot imagine why any one should insist on carrying bills in large quantities and with evident exposure to robbery or accident.

The excitement of a lawsuit must be agreeable to Mr. JAMES FISK, Jr. To be involved in legal meshes, either as plaintiff or defendant, seems to be his normal state. Libel suits being in abeyance, he has turned his attention to nobler game. His very latest embellishment is with a Sunday School—a lately-established and prosperous mission school for poor children on the west side of the City. The managers of this Sunday School, it seems, had secured and duly recorded a lease of one of the halls in Mr. FISK's Opera House for the term of three years. On Sunday the children and teachers assembled as usual and found the doors closed against them. The outrage was unexpected and remains unexplained. We understand that the law is to be invoked by the Superintendent of the Sunday School, and Mr. FISK, the proprietor of the Opera House, will be asked to respond in damages.

Our Georgia correspondent, in the letter we published yesterday, gave what, in spite of all drawbacks, we must regard as on the whole an encouraging picture of the prospects in that State. The cotton crop is good;—the relations between whites and the negroes friendly,—the former paying promptly on all their contracts for work, and the latter being satisfied with the results of their labor. "In no part of the world," says our correspondent, "is the corresponding class of laborers as prosperous, in a material sense, as these negroes." This is rather strong language, but we hope that facts justify it. Politics seem to be, by general consent, discarded,—the general activity or all classes being to "go to work and make something."

PARIS, Monday, Jan. 18.

The Senate and Corps Legislatif assembled to-day. The session was opened by the Emperor in person with a speech from the throne. He said the task before the Legislature was a serious one, viz., to conduct a Government strong enough to repress the excesses while accepting all the benefits of liberty. The laws making concessions to the Press and granting the right of public meeting had had the effect of preserving public order, and the fact that the recent elections resulted in favor of the Government confirmed the justice and wisdom of these concessions. The laws providing for military reorganization had given strength and confidence to the nation, which was now ready to meet all events of the future. The armament of the forces was perfect, the arsenals were filled with supplies, the reserves were well drilled, and the reorganization of the National Guard approached completion; the fleets had been recreated, and the fortifications at all important points were in good condition. The Imperial wish was realized. France was so placed as to vindicate her status in the destinies of the world. Peace had been heretofore sought, not because of weakness, but to sustain the honor of the State. The revolution in Spain had not altered the good relations of France with that country. The Conference, which had just terminated its sessions, and which would extinguish a conflict which had become imminent, was the last grand act, the importance of which all should appreciate. The members of that body had all agreed on a principle calculated to restore friendship between the Turks and Greeks. If the firm hopes of success which they entertained should be realized, nothing would be left to trouble the general harmony of the nations. The Chambers would attend to the internal development of the country, mainly through its agricultural interests, and might possibly seek to bring about a reduction in the public charges. The Emperor referred to the approaching reélection of the Corps Legislatif, congratulated the members on the harmony which existed between the Throne, the Legislature and the people, and declared he favored full and free discussion when it did not touch the Constitution; that instrument was above all debate; and he exalted the benefits which it had conferred upon the country. The Emperor concluded as follows: "All Governments are liable to error; fortune declines to smile on all enterprises; but the country knows no thought, no act of mine, which has not been given to the glory of France. It knows that I first sought to create a vigorous control of the Administration, and then to enlarge the powers of deliberative assemblies, to prove that the true support of the Government is in the independence and patriotism of the great bodies of the State. Soon the nation in the elections will mark the path which all must follow, and will repeat its rejection of revolution and its desire to found the destinies of France on the intimate union of power and liberty."

HAVANA, Monday, Jan. 18.

A small army of Government officials of all classes has arrived here from Spain. Old and tried public servants, many of them native Cubans, have been discharged to make room for them. These removals have caused much public feeling. Gen. SICKLES arrived in the steamer from Mexico, and sails to-day for New-York. Count VALMASEDA has officially informed THE DULCE that he took possession of Bayamo, the headquarters of the insurgents, on the 16th inst. The rebels, on retreating, set fire to and totally destroyed the town. VALMASEDA reports that previous to the occupation of Bayamo he defeated the rebels at Cunto del Embarcadero and Paso Rio Salvado. He adds that the rebel forces are scattered in small parties over the country, and are supplying themselves with provisions by pillage. Most of the bands are retreating to the mountains. The official report of the battle of Paso Rio Salado states the rebels lost 120 killed, with a proportionate number wounded. The loss of the Spanish troops is not given.

The Diario says the proclamations of Captain General DULCE have produced good results in the Central Department of the Island.

The same paper reports that several attempts have been made to assassinate Spanish soldiers in the streets of Havana.

MEXICO.

A Speech by Gen. Rosecrans—The Tehuantepec Railroad.

HAVANA, Monday, Jan. 18.

The steamer from Vera Cruz has arrived. She brings the following news:

The Monitor, of the City of Mexico, says that at a dinner given to the Diplomatic Corps on New-Year's Day, the most friendly assurances were interchanged between the Mexican Ministers and the representatives of the United States. In a speech on the occasion, Gen. ROSECRANS declared that the words he used as his presentation to President JUAREZ expressed truth, and continued his heaven against crediting the articles of certain journals, which he denounced as inspired by malevolence. He affirmed that the present Administration of the United States shared, and the coming Administration would continue to share, the sentiments which he had expressed toward the Mexican Republic.

The concessions granted in 1866 by the Mexican Government to EADS EA SON for building the Tehuantepec Road has been modified. According to the conditions as they now stand, Mr. EA SON is to construct the road from Coatzacoalcos, on the Gulf coast, to Tonalaz, a port on the Pacific. Until the road is completed, he is obliged to establish communication by wagons, and for that purpose he is allowed four years and a half to finish a wagon road.

The Mexican Congress has passed a law allowing the exportation of minerals free of duty.

The Late Outrages—Proclamation by Gov. Brownlow—The Militia to be Organized and Martial Law Proclaimed.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Monday, Jan. 18.

I give you below the substance of a very important proclamation which will be issued by Gov. BROWNLOW on Wednesday morning:

Whereas, There exists in Middle and West Tennessee lawless bands, who act at defiance civil law, and in certain localities render it impossible for civil officers to enforce the laws of the State; and,

Whereas, Those masked villains called KUKLUX are taking prisoners from jails, and hanging them without trial, and are abducting passengers from railroad trains, and notifying conductors of Northern birth to leave the State, thus having driven four conductors from one road, (the Decatur and Alabama road); and,

Whereas, Certain ambitious men have made incendiary speeches advising the overthrow of the State Government, thereby encouraging these bands; and,

Whereas, Certain rebel newspapers have encouraged these men by denying the existence of the KUKLUX, by ridiculing their acts and failing to condemn them; and,

Whereas, The Legislature has amended the Militia law, and given me authority to meet such outrages. Now, therefore,

I, WILLIAM G. BROWNLOW, Governor of Tennessee, do call upon all good and loyal citizens to enter the ranks of the State Guards, be mustered into service, and aid in suppressing this lawlessness. Those enrolling in East Tennessee will be transported to Nashville, and armed and placed under command of Gen. JOS. A. COOPER. Another proclamation will be duly issued designating the counties in which I shall declare martial law, the effect of which will be to set aside civil law, and turn over offenders to the military, to be tried and punished summarily. These outrages have been long borne, but the Executive is not to be cajoled or terrified. All citizens are warned against harboring any KUKLUX. The Governor will make the Guards numerous and effective enough to make Middle and West Tennessee as orderly and quiet as East Tennessee is to-day.

In testimony whereof, I have signed the foregoing and affixed the great seal of the State this 20th January, 1869.

(Signed,) WILLIAM G. BROWLOW.

Gen. COOPER is now near Columbia with a small force, awaiting additional troops. I do not think any collision between armed forces probable.

Trouble With the Military at Hayes City, Kansas.

ST. LOUIS, Monday, Jan. 18.

The Leavenworth Conservative, of Saturday, has a dispatch from Hayes City which states that on Tuesday night Col. NELSON, at Fort Hayes, sent a guard of soldiers under Lieut. KELLY to Hayes City to arrest all persons found up after 9 o'clock. The guard entered a ball-room and arrested fifty-one persons, and kept them in the guard-house all night. The dispatch states that Col. NELSON threatens to close all the saloons and tear down the livery stables. An indignation meeting was held on Friday, at which Col. NELSON's arbitrary acts were denounced, and a petition was sent to their Representatives at Topeka to bring the matter before the Legislature. Great excitement existed, and trouble was anticipated.

The Indiana Senatorship—Opposition to Gov. Cumback.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Monday, Jan. 18.

There is a very determined opposition to the election of Lieut.-Gov. CUMBACK, the nominee of the Republican caucus for United States Senator, by a part of the Republican members of the Legislature. The Senate to-day passed resolutions censuring Gov. CUMBACK for the Cumback-Baker correspondence previous to his nomination for the State ticket last year. Eleven Republicans voted in the affirmative, but only a portion of them, however, will bolt the nomination in the election to-morrow.

The Democrats to-night in caucus voted to give Senator HENDRICKS a complimentary vote.

The Connecticut Western Railroad Company.

HARTFORD, Monday, Jan. 18.

Hartford voted to-day, (3,051 yeas to 80 nays,) to subscribe $250,000 to the stock of the Connecticut Western Railroad Company, in addition to $500,000 already subscribed. This insures the construction of the road, which will be put under contract in the Spring, and is to connect this city with the Hudson River, and give us a new route to the West, much shorter than any existing routes. The road will be completed in July, 1870.

The Maine Senatorial Contest—Withdrawal of Mr. Morrill.

AUGUSTA, Me., Monday, Jan. 18.

Mr. MORRILL withdraws from the Senatorial contest on the following note, which is published this morning:

To my Friends in the Legislature:

With you I have uniformly entertained the closest conviction that no authoritive or binding conclusion was reached in the recent Legislative Senatorial caucus, but it has now become apparent to me that to continue the canvass would necessarily embarrass those who have honored me with their support. Therefore, deeply grateful for your partiality, I am impelled to withdraw the further use of my name.

L. M. MORRILL.

EUROPEAN NEWS BY MAIL.

ARRIVAL OF THE NEW-YORK AND CITY OF ANTWERP.

The steamships New-York, from Bremen Jan. 7 and Southampton Jan. 8, and City of Antwerp, from Liverpool Jan. 6 and Queenstown Jan. 7, reached this port yesterday. These vessels bring four days' later news than was at hand by the Cuba.

Two of the Paris evening papers, the Standard and Public, deny that the Emperor NAPOLEON has ordered the French Minister at Madrid to support the Prince of the Asturias as a candidate for the Spanish throne. The Constitutionnel goes further. It says that when a foreign diplomatist recently asked the Emperor whether the Prince of Carignan was the candidate proposed by him for the throne of Spain, His Majesty replied: "I know the Spanish character too well to ever commit the fault of recommending one candidate more than another. Whatever chances of success he might have, it would be sufficient that he was supported by France for Spain to reject him. For these reasons I have directed that positive orders should be given to my representative at Madrid to abstain from all advice, and even from all insinuation of a nature to engage in any way whatever the responsibility of France, and to merely confine himself to the assurance that no one wishes more sincerely than I do that Spain may pass successfully through her present crisis."

An Ex-Minister of the French Republic, and an active member of the Opposition, the Vicomte LANJUINAIS, attended, on Jan. 1, the funeral of a friend. The coffin was carried out of the apartment in which the family of the deceased had assembled, but M. DE LANJUINAIS, instead of following with them the remains of his friend, apparently fell asleep on the sofa. He was not asleep, but dead. His father was the celebrated "conventionel," who in 1815 presided over the House of Deputies.

The Pope has sent a reply to King VICTOR EMMANUEL's letter in favor of ARMI and LUZZI. He expresses first his profound regret that the King should make such an appeal, which the Pope declares to be an intervention in the judicial affairs of a neighboring State wholly without parallel. By showing himself so much concerned for ARMI and LUZZI, condemned as traitors, the "King of Sardinia" avows that the rebellion got up by those men commended his sympathy. The Popes have always been prompt to exercise clemency, the most precious of their sovereign prerogatives, but they have acted from the dictates of their own hearts, not by the recommendation or under the influence of others, and his Holiness will never depart from the example of his predecessors. Nor can he refrain from expostulating with the King of Sardinia for lending himself to the designs of the revolution, and even prejudicing his own authority by intercoding for two rebels, especially after obtaining so many concessions from the Holy See.

On Jan. 6, confirmatory intelligence was received in Liverpool, of a terrible collision between two Turkish vessels, and the loss of 220 lives. The news comes from Constantinople by way of Havre, and is dated from the latter port, Dec. 31. The following are the main facts, so far as can at present be learned, of this catastrophe: About midnight on the 17th December, about forty-one miles from Smyrna, at a place called Carsbournen, two steamers belonging to the Azizie Company, viz., the Galliosp and the Cherkieh, came into collision. The force of the contact was dreadful, and the Galliosp foundered almost immediately, only 30 passengers out of 200 being saved. The Cherkieh was so greatly damaged by the collision that she had to be run ashore, two miles from Smyrna, in order to prevent her from sinking. The Galliosp had a very valuable cargo and a large quantity of specie on board when she foundered.

SPAIN.

Particulars of the Malaga Insurrection.

From the Madrid Gazette, Jan. 2.

On the morning of the 30th ult., so soon as the arrival of Gen. CABALLERO DE RODAS at the town of Antiquera was known in Malaga, the National Guard began to assume a hostile attitude, erecting barricades and occupying important positions.

Gen. PAVIA, the Military Commander of the place, arrived at midnight on the 29th, and assumed command on the following morning. In view of the attitude of the militia he made his dispositions accordingly, causing the troops to occupy those strategical points which would be useful should the revolt have to be suppressed.

Brigadier PAVIA issued an address to the volunteers in arms, reminding them of the order to return to their homes and abandon the barricades, and thus avoid compelling him to place the town in a state of siege. Several of the honorable volunteers, following the counsel of the Brigadier, retired to their homes, and two battalions proceeded to place themselves at the disposition of the Alcalde; but those of the volunteers who had revolted, and were in the majority, concentrated themselves in the Trinity and Perchel quarters, which they fortified with barricades. The night of Dec. 30, passed off quietly. The authorities used all possible means of persuasion; but the rebels still kept up their hostly attitude, still no open acts or hostility had as yet been committed.

On the 31st, very early in the morning, the Commander-in-Chief of the army of Andalusia arrived with his troops at the Malaga railway station, and some hours afterward, upon learning that the insurgents were in possession of a large portion of the town, he issued the following proclamation:

INHABITANTS OF MALAGA! The attitude assumed by a certain portion of the citizen militia, without waiting for the communication of my instructions relative to its precise attitude, which insurmount, and some hours afterward, upon learning that the insurgents were in possession of a large portion of the town, he issued the following proclamation:

INHABITANTS OF MALAGA! The attitude assumed by a certain portion of the citizen militia, without waiting for the communication of my instructions relative to its precise attitude, which insurmount, identical with those laid down on the 17th November, compels me to the sad necessity of issuing the following orders: 1. The town and province of Malaga are declared in a state of siege. 2. With the exception of the two battalions and a few of the companies who have respected the law, the volunteers in this town, who are in the possession of arms, are required to surrender their arms in the course of to-day. 3. The Military Governor of the place will announce the localities where the surrender of the arms is to be made. 4. I also grant the same delay of this day, during which the foreign Consuls and well-disposed persons can leave the town.

Inhabitants of Malaga! The means of attack, which, upon the least resistance being made, are at my disposal, will cause, to my great sorrow, the ruin and desolation of your town. The chastisement of the guilty persons who have disobeyed their proper leaders, and have even dared to kill them, will be the more exemplary and terrible in proportion to the resistance they offer to the injunctions of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army of Operation of Ansalusia and Granada. CABALLERO DE RODAS.

The Brigadier PAVIA, with the troops of the garrison at Malaga, occupied immediately afterward the Custom-house Alcazaba, the forts of San José, and Del Espigon, the bank, the municipality, San Agustin, the Episcopal house, the cathedral, and the quarters of Levante, Capuchinos, Merced and Trinity.

The proclamation of the Commander-in-Chief produced for a time a favorable impression among the more docile; but the insurgents, seeing their comrades abandon the barricades, by spreading alarming reports that a republic had been proclaimed in various parts of Andalusia, succeeded in reanimating and encouraging the vacillating ones, who returned to the barricades, and prepared for the contest.

Some of the insurgents had rushed to the Espigon battery to seize the guns. An officer in command of two companies of infantry had been dispatched to that battery, with wise and persuasive instructions to counsel the insurgents to desist from their scheme. The soldiers were received with shots, which were returned. The engagement lasted about an hour and a half. Two war schooners anchored in the port opened fire on the Right.

At the same time in the afternoon of the 31st, the battalion of the Barbastro Chasseurs, who, during the day, had been able to patrol, freely moving through the town, were attacked at the Capuchinos. The Iberia regiment and two companies of volunteers, under the orders of a Major, kept up the fight against the troops. The barricades were taken at the point of the bayonet, and at 9 P. M. the insurgents were put to flight. In addition to the proclamation of the Commander-in-Chief, it was announced to the foreign Consuls that early in the following day the insurgents would be attacked in a more energetic and decisive manner should they not have laid down their arms.

Early on the morning of the 1st inst. Col. BURDIZ, at the head of some troops, went out to post the proclamation of the Commander-in-Chief, when he was fired upon, and from that moment the struggle continued without ceasing.

At 9 o'clock a chief of the insurgents presented himself to the Military Governor to announce the surrender of the arms. He demanded a truce delay, and made certain propositions which were deemed inadmissable, and rejected by the Governor, who enjoined the insurgents to lay down their arms in a quarter of an hour.

At the end of that time the fire recommenced. The port and the vessels of the fleet directed their fire upon the Trinity quarter, where the rebellion had been concentrated. An hour later the troops of Gen. CABALLERO attacked that quarter, and after a severe contest, which lasted until night, the troops occupied the Trinity and Perchel quarters, and the Teinan and San Domingo bridges, over the Guadalmedina, carrying also the Alameda and the districts down to the coast, the Plaza del Marichal, the Garden of Huerto and Los Clarales, and all the houses situated on both banks of the rivers.

Gen. PAVIA, who was waiting in his position the time when he should operate in support of the attack of the Commander-in-Chief, formed a column when he saw that the Teinan Bridge was carried, and advanced to attack a position at the Sea-gate and the Esca Neuve. Having there met the troops of Gen. CABALLERO, who were marching to the same point, he relinquished that plan, and fell back upon the Rue Santa Maria, and, directing his course toward the Plaza de la Constitution, seized the adjacent houses. By this time night had set in, and after a hot fire, he succeeded in making a number of prisoners.

More than 600 insurgents fell into the hands of the troops, who fought with the greatest bravery, and displayed the highest military skill and humanity. The barricades were captured at the point of the bayonet, and the point-blank volleys which were discharged from the ranks of the mutinous could not for a moment arrest the course of the brave soldiers.

The Commander-in-Chief still retains the positions captured, and if, as is hardly possible, there should still be to-day rebels who are behind us to persevere in their rash resistance, they will be again attacked with the greatest energy. The insurgents had great defensive resources and munitions of war of all kinds, all of which were captured by the brave and faithful troops.

The foregoing is the latest information received at the Ministry of War up to last midnight. Yesterday the greatest tranquillity prevailed in all the other provinces of Spain.

THE FRENCH EMPIRE.

Napoleon's New-Year's Day Speech to the Corps Diplomatique.

The following is a report of the speech delivered by the Emperor to the Diplomatic Body on New-Year's Day:

"I am happy to say that a spirit of conciliation animates all the European Powers, and that the moment a difficulty arises they draw among themselves to smooth away and avert complications. I hope the year now commencing will contribute, like the one just expired, toward removing many apprehensions and strengthening the bonds which should unite civilized nations."

To the congratulations of his Deputies His Majesty replied:

"Every year the collaboration of the Legislative Body becomes more indispensable to the preservation in France of that real liberty which can only prosper through respect for the laws and a just balance of power. It is always, therefore, with lively satisfaction that I receive the expression of your devoted and patriotic sentiments."

To the members of the Court of Cassation the Emperor addressed the following:

"The sense of justice must penetrate now more than ever our national customs; it is the most sure guarantee of liberty."

His Majesty spoke as follows to the clergy:

"The congratulations of the clergy move me deeply; their prayers sustain and console us. From what is going on in the world we can see how indispensable it is to assert the great principles of Christianity, which teach us virtue, that we may know how to live, and immortality, that we may know how to die."

GEN. GARIBALDI.

His Election to the Italian Parliament—Address of Thanks.

From the Pall Mall Gazette, Jan. 6.

Gen. GARIBALDI, having been elected member of the Italian Parliament for Ozieri, in the island of Sardinia, has returned thanks in an address which will cause some consternation at Florence. The General finds himself, he says, placed by this election between the affectionate sympathies which he has for the people, and the repugnance he entertains to approach the Government which might be called "the creation of God," as an eminent Englishman called the Government of Naples in 1860. Old Republicans in principle and in practice, his friends and himself accepted the monarchy in good faith. But what, he asks, have we obtained from that Government—a Government which only knows how to commit exactions, to waste the substance of the people, and become the agent of a foreign Power? The General continues: "If truth is to be respected, must it not be said that the conduct of this Government in connection with the events of the last Roman campaign was a course of treachery? Among a thousand admirable items to that. Profiting by my banishment to Caprera, (after Aspmulunga,) where so much was done to detain me as a prisoner, the governing authorities wished to appear as liberators, and they made known that a few shots alone were required in Rome to open the path to the capitol; hence the error into which the unfortunate Roman fell, and the immortal seventy, judged by the heroic HENRI CARROLL. I, who knew the deceit of these gentlemen, mistrusted their generous idea, and, trembling for the fate of those brave men, gave orders to CARROLL to fall back upon us toward the frontier; but it was too late. My first disposition upon the Roman territory was not executed, my message not having reached CARROLL, and I reached the spot after the catastrophe. (I can produce the documents.) After my departure for Caprera, which I could not have accomplished without the assistance of my excellent friends of Maddalena and Galura, I found the movement begun, and my friends and my zone engaged in it. I ruined to the frontier in order to have the honor of taking part in the finest, the most splendid, and the most generous of Roman enterprises, the overthrow of the Government of Satan. On the 22d of October I passed the frontier; on the 23d I had joined MENOTTI's corps; on the 26th we stormed Monte Rotondo; on the 28th we had compelled the Papal army to fall back within the boundaries of Rome. That army blew up, in fear, the bridges behind it, and we were under the walls of the old capital of the world—a den of all that is most hideous in the human race—the greatest of Italian glories, and, in a word, our capital, without which Italy is not Italy, but merely a vain word to call up a pitying smile. On the 3d of November this handful of young men—whom a Government, which I blush to call Italian, not only abandoned but sold, not only did not assist, but, despoiled of their munitions, their ammunition and their bread-fought at Mentana. The handful of young men—robbed and betrayed—belonged to those who had enriched the arsenals of the State with more material than they had ever possessed. And if you are told that in 1860 these young men were not dissuaded, but, on the contrary, aided, say to those who tell you so that they lie, and that I will prove it whenever they like."

HON. REVERDY JOHNSON.

The American Minister and the Workingmen of South London.

A crowded gathering of workingmen assembled at the South London Baths on the evening of Dec. 21, to present an address to his Excellency, Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON, the American Minister. The presentation arose out of a desire on the part of the workingmen to show they had no sympathy with the proceedings of those connected with the Reform League who, a short time since, withdrew the invitation they had given to Mr. JOHNSON to meet the workingmen at a banquet. The large hall in which the presentation was made was densely crowded, and the proceedings were marked throughout by the greatest enthusiasm. The chair was taken by Rev. NEWMAN HALL, who was supported by Mr. LOCKE, M. P., and Mr. MCKENZIE, M. P. Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON and Mr. BENJAMIN MOORE, the Secretary of the American Legation, were received by the Committee in the Board-room, and were greeted with repeated rounds of cheering.

Rev. NEWMAN HALL introduced the American Minister to the meeting, and briefly referred to the feelings of the workingmen in England throughout the late crisis in the history of America, which had always been in favor of freedom and liberty, and opposed to the rebellion set on foot by those who desired to perpetuate slavery. He eulogized the course which Mr. REVERDY JOHNSON had taken since his arrival in testing bigotes be bygones, and doing all in his power to promote good will and friendship between the two countries, and expressed an earnest hope that Great Britain and America might be closely united together as the champions of freedom in every part of the world.

The address was very complimentary to Mr. JOHNSON, and closed with the hope that America and England may ever be bound together in the closest ties of international peace and good-will. Mr. JOHNSON's reply was couched in a similar strain of friendly compliment and good wishes. On rising to speak, he was received with enthusiastic cheers. After dwelling at some length on the character, condition, and prospects of the workingmen of England and America, he proceeded to to refer to the kindly feelings which should exist between the two countries. No man, he said, should know better than you that if war were to break out it would fall the heaviest on your heads. You form the rank and file, your homes would witness the battle-fields, while the honor, if gained, would be given to one who does not belong to your class. While, therefore, I am sure that if your country at any time should have its rights violated, and its honor attempted to be tarnished, and it should be found impossible to protect the one or to maintain the other except by war, that you would rally to that standard which for more than one thousand years has "braved the battle and the breeze." You as you value life, as you value the happiness of your families, as you value the precepts of humanity, as you value the higher precepts of your God, see to it that no war shall occur which can be averted without sacrificing the rights or impairing the honor of England. But if war under any circumstances be a calamity to be deplored, what would be the character of a war between your country and mine? Why, I would as soon think of raising my arm against a ruler of my own country as against this country. I know of no difference between us. I would ask you, after this meeting is over, to ask yourselves what is the difference between myself and an Englishman. I am unable to distinguish the slightest difference between any Englishman I have met and myself, except, as I stated a few days since as a joke, (and I hope you will take it as such,) that we, in America, speak English a little better than you do yourselves. In America we have lived 1,000 years during the last five or six years—we have pressed centuries into years, and we are at wise now as we should have been if those centuries had passed in the ordinary course of time. We know the great value of amicable relations between Great Britain and the United States, and we know that such relations are not only conducive to the interests and welfare of both countries, but to the rest of the world. With the flags of the two countries flying on every ocean as friends, what have we to fear from the world? We shall be able to keep the peace, and if we fail to keep peace we shall be able to punish those who shall dare to break it, shoulder to shoulder the two countries will march on, the pioneers of Christian civilization, (if enlarge the area of human freedom, to break down the trammels which have discouraged the manhood of the world, and sooner or later, not by force, but by example, the world will come to be what England and the United States now are—not only the freest countries upon the face of the habitable globe, but the happiest and the most powerful. His Excellency then briefly touched upon the advantages which would result to the two countries from the adoption of a uniform ocean penny postage, the effect of which would be to bring the people into closer and more frequent communication with each other, and, in conclusion, said, I can only give my best wishes for the good of you, and your families, and with the assurance of a heart full of gratitude for the kind manner in which you have received me I bid you all good night.

His Excellency resumed his seat amid loud and prolonged cheering.

A vote of thanks to His Excellency, proposed by Mr. LOCKE, M. P., and seconded by Mr. MCKENZIE, M. P., brought the proceedings to a close.

AMUSEMENTS.

Musical.

STEINWAY HALL.

The concert given last night in aid of the St. David's Benevolent Society will not, we fear, contribute much to the resources of that institution. Taffey was evidently deterred by the storm. The concert itself was a disappointment. Every one expected that the beautiful melodies of Wales would constitute a leading feature of the programme. This, however, turned out to be a complete mistake. The numbers were of the usual sort pertaining to a miscellaneous concert. Mr. J. R. THOMAS contributed a new song, called "Voice of the Mountain Land," which he sang with feeling. It is, like all this gentleman's compositions, melodious and musician-like, and will, we think, become popular. Mrs. MOSART and Mr. GEORGE SIMPSON were careful and satisfactory, and Miss MATILDA TOZER played two violin solos exquisitely. The Welsh musical element was represented by Mr. AP MADOC (tenor) and Mr. LAWSYO LEWIS, (basso.) Both gentlemen did their best, and we hope to hear them on the next anniversary of the Society. Mr. EB. HOFFMAN presided at the piano and played the accompaniments admirably.

CONCERT TO-NIGHT.

Signora ELMIRA LAZARE, a prima donna of distinction in Italy, will make her first appearance in this country at Steinway Hall to-night. She is said to possess a remarkably fine soprano voice, and much skill as a cantatrice. She will be assisted by Mr. W. J. HILL, Sig. FOSSATI, Mr. HARRY SAUNDERSON, Mr. V. C. BURRAP and Mr. OTTO SINGER, (accompanist.)

The Indian Question—Letter from Gen. Hazen to the United States Commission.

To the President of the United States Indian Commission, New-York City:

SIR: I would respectfully call the attention of your Commission to the fact that there is collecting at this point, for the care and protection of the Government, under my direction, some eight or ten thousand of the wild Comanches and Kiowas and other Indians, who, of all those upon the Plains, have been least affected by contact with the white man—the purpose of the Government, here and elsewhere, being to place all these Indians upon lands for permanent homes where the evils so loudly proclaimed against cannot continue, and where they will ultimately become self-supporting.

Feeling that the purposes and intentions of your Commission are humane and worthy, I would most respectfully suggest that one of your own number, or some person chosen by you, come to this place, accepting my hospitalities, the coming Winter, and here study and learn the condition and wants of these people.

Here an intelligent and true remedy may be found for the evils that surround them. I will further say, that practical missionaries, of good moral character, who should be young and active, of the following avocations: farmers, house builders, gardeners, fruiters and cattle-raisers, with such aids as will enable them to instruct in all these branches, can do much in the cause of humanity and assist greatly in solving the true problem of Indian amelioration.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. B. HAZEN, Brevet Major-General U. S. A., Commanding Southern Indian Territory.

A Card.

To the Shareholders in the American Merchants' Union Express Company, and to the Public:

The undersigned, as President of the American Merchants' Union Express Company, having noticed the publication in the New-York papers of a complaint in an action, brought in the Court of Common Pleas of the City of New-York, by one James H. McVicker, as plaintiff, against the undersigned, as President of the American Merchants' Union Express Company, and others, as defendants, deems it his duty to make to the stockholders and patrons of said first-named Company the following statement:

First—It is known to the undersigned that the said suit has been instigated and is now being prosecuted in the name of said McVicker by certain stock speculators and others having interests in hostility to the American Merchants' Union Express Company, and for the purpose of obstructing and impeding the business operations of the said Company, and in the sole interest of parties opposed to such organization and to the interests of the stockholders therein, with a view to depress the market value of the stock.

Second—That the organization of the American Merchants' Union Express Company is, and since the 1st day of December, 1868, has been an accomplished fact. That since that date no business has been transacted, and none is now being transacted by or in the names of either the American or Merchants' Union Express Company, but the consolidated Company has been, and now is, in the successful prosecution of business over all the lines heretofore operated by said original Companies, and that the practical results of the business, under such organization, have been satisfactory and profitable, and have more than met expectations. That a large majority of the stocks, both of the American and Merchants' Union Express Companies, have been already voluntarily converted into the stock of the new Company.

Third—The undersigned desires to call special attention to the following false, libelous and malicious portion of such complaint, and which is designed to injure the business standing and pecuniary responsibility of said Company, viz.:

"That the American Express Company has not the ability to continue the business of the consolidated Companies without the use of the assessment of five per cent. upon the stock of the Merchants' Union, and the only funds in the treasury of the consolidated Companies are or will be the amounts received form such assessment; that this assessment will only postpone the bankruptcy of the two Companies for a brief period, and if a loss of any large amount should now occur to either or both of the Companies, such loss could only be paid by another assessment upon the Merchants' Union."

In answer to the above, the undersigned says that at the time of the consolidation of said Companies, each of said Companies was perfectly solvent and capable of continuing the business upon the lines then operated by it with perfect safety to the public; and that the consolidated Company is now the owner and possessed of more than $5,000,000 of actual property and cash, without any indebtedness, and that the current receipts of said Company since the consolidation have been, and now are, much greater than the current disbursements, and that no Express Company has ever existed in the United States with equal facilities for the transaction of business, or capable of transacting its business with equal safety to the public.

The originators of such libel will be duly prosecuted in the Courts as soon as the responsible authors thereof can be ascertained.

The object and intent of these malicious and unwarrantable attacks upon the American Merchants' Union Express Company should be known and understood by the stockholders and the public, and, when so understood, will react upon the authors of them. Answers are now being prepared by the different defendants in said action, denying fully and explicitly the acts of misconduct therein alleged, and all of the allegations therein contained derogatory to the responsibility of the American Merchants' Union Express Company, and the undersigned earnestly hopes that no stockholder in either the American or Merchants' Union Express Companies will allow himself by these shallow devices to be indirect to sacrifice his stock in the market, or to forbear to avail himself of the benefits heretofore anticipated, and now manifestly resulting from such a consolidation.

The undersigned will only add that there is nothing in the proceedings above mentioned, or in any other proceeding now pending, which prevents the stockholders in the American and Merchants' Union Express Companies from surrendering their certificates pursuant to the terms of the consolidation, so as to become legally entitled to the benefits thereof. Nor is there anything in such proceedings which interferes with the regular business of the Consolidated Company. The undersigned has been advised, and has no doubt that such consolidation cannot be disturbed, and that the true interests of all parties will be best protected and promoted by the earliest practicable conversion of shares yet outstanding.

President of the American Merchants' Union Express Company.

California Pacific Railroad Company.

FIRST MORTGAGE TWENTY-YEAR SEVEN PER CENT.

GOLD BONDS,

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD COIN.

COUPONS PAYABLE FIRST JANUARY AND JULY, AT NATIONAL PARK BANK, NEW-YORK, FREE OF GOVERNMENT TAX.

THE UNDERSIGNED NOW OFFER FOR SALE A LIMITED NUMBER OF THE ABOVE DESIRABLE BONDS, AT PAR, WITH ACCRUED INTEREST IN CURRENCY.

The total amount of Bonds authorized to be issued is $8,250,000,

LESS THAN $23,000 PER MILE.

THE LARGER PORTION OF THIS ISSUE HAS ALREADY BEEN SOLD.

THESE BONDS ARE SECURED BY A FIRST MORTGAGE ON THE ENTIRE PROPERTY OF THE COMPANY, including their valuable LANDS, WHARVES and WATER PRIVILEGES at Vallejo and elsewhere.

Total length of road, 105 miles.

Finished, fully stocked and equipped, and now running from Vallejo to Sacramento, 61 miles.

The monthly earnings on this portion of the road are now nearly three times the monthly interest on the entire issue of Bonds.

This road is the most direct route between San Francisco and Sacramento, reducing the time between these two cities to three and one-half hours.

The Marysville line is in process of construction; the grading nearly completed, one-third of the iron on hand, and the balance purchased, shipped and expected to arrive in February. The road will be completed early this season, and, when finished, the total net receipts should amount to at least $3,000 (gold) per mile.

The road-bed is of most substantial character—permanent, solid and completely ballasted. The iron is of the best quality, weighing 60 lbs. per yard, and the rolling stock and equipment are in every respect first-class.

The country through which this road runs is entirely exempt from either snow, ice or frost, and its agricultural productiveness and adaptedness for any portion of the State.

From unqualified assurances and satisfactory proofs received by us from reliable parties in California, of the great prosperity to be realized by the completion of this road, we do most unhesitatingly recommend these securities to our friends and the public as a first-class investment.

Both and every subscriber to this loan.

Either of the undersigned will receive subscriptions and deliver Bonds.

Government securities, at market rates, will be taken in exchange for these Bonds.

Circulars, maps and other information can be had on application to either of the subscribers.

"PARTICIPATION INSURANCE."

THE

CONTINENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY

OF NEW-YORK.

OFFICES:

NO. 102 BROADWAY, NEW-YORK,

AND

NO. 149 MONTAGUE-ST., BROOKLYN,

Invites the attention of property owners to the following indcoements for insuring in that Company:

Its Capital (paid up in Cash) is	$500,000 00
Its Surplus of Assets, (Jan. 1, 1869,) is	1,566,854 16
Making its Total Cash Assets	$2,066,854 16

The Company insures against loss by fire, on Buildings, Merchandise, Household Furniture, Rents, Leases, Manufactories, (except of the more perilous kinds,) Farm property, and other insurable interests, at reasonable rates of premium.

IN THE "PARTICIPATION PLAN," by which the entire profits of its business are divided, in the ratio of net cost, between its customers and stockholders, as follows:

THREE-QUARTERS are paid back to customers, in scrip redeemable in the premiums of the Company, holding a scrip reserve fund equal to the amount of its capital. ONE-QUARTER is divided to stockholders, in cash.

It will be seen, the customer thus obtains his insurance AT ABOUT WHAT IT COSTS THE COMPANY TO PROTECT HIM, while his security, by its stock interest, is increased by a contingent profit, available almost beyond the possibility of failure, in case of LARGE CONFLAGRATION, an important point of danger to property owners in large cities.

The Company issues non-participating policies, (which do not entitle the holders to participate in the profits,) when the hazards of the risk, as compared with the customary rate, will not justify participation. Such policies, however, do entitle the holder to all the security which the system provides, and will be issued at prices as low as experience proves to be adequate to the hazard, and therefore as low as any responsible company can properly accept.

M. H. LAMPORT, Vice-President.

THE LINCOLN ASSASSINATION.

Confessions of Two of the Prisoners—Statements by Arnold and Atzerodt—The Plans of the Conspirators—John H. Surratt.

From the Baltimore American, Jan. 18.

Now that the trial of JOHN SURRATT for participation in the assassination of President LINCOLN has been thrown out of Court through the technicalities of the law, and he is announced as preparing for press a narrative of the whole transaction, it may serve a good purpose to give publicity to the following statement of SAMUEL B. ARNOLD, one of the prisoners at the Dry Tortugas, made in Baltimore, voluntarily, four days after the assassination. We also give the confession of ATZERODT, made in his cell on the night before the execution. Both of these confessions we have in our possession in the handwriting of the prisoners, and they have hitherto not been made public under the expectation that they would be used in the trial of JOHN SURRATT. The confession of ARNOLD was made in the office of Marshal MCPHAIL, on the 18th of April, 1865, immediately on his being brought to this city from Fortress Monroe. He sat down at a desk and voluntarily wrote it without any questioning. The confession of ATZERODT was made in his cell, at Washington, on the night before his execution. He asked for paper, and it is written with a lead pencil, the disconnected manner of it indicating the state of mind of the prisoner:

CONFESSION OF SAMUEL B. ARNOLD, MADE APRIL 18, 1865.

To Whom it May Concern:

Know that I, SAMUEL B. ARNOLD, about the latter part of August or first part of September, 1864, was sent, not by J. WILKES BOOTH, who was a guest at Barnum's Hotel, in the City of Baltimore, Md., to call to see him. I had not seen the same J. WILKES BOOTH since 1859, when we both were schoolmates at St. Timothy's Hall, President L. VAN BOKKELEN then having said Hall as a place of tuition. His reception of me was warm. Calling for wine and cigars, we conversed a short time upon our former school-boy days. We were interrupted by a knock at the door, when MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN was introduced. After a formal introduction, we sat sipping our wine, and all three smoked a cigar. During smoking, he having heard previously of my political feelings or sentiments, he spoke in glowing terms of the Confederacy and the number of surplus prisoners in the hands of the United States. Then caused the proposition by J. WILKES BOOTH, seconded by MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN, that something could be accomplished, viz.: of kidnapping President LINCOLN, as he frequently went unguarded out to the Soldiers' Home; and he thought he could be picked up, carried to Richmond, and his exchange produce the exchange for the President of all the prisoners in the Federal hands. He, J. WILKES BOOTH, then asked the question, if the scheme, if it we would enter into it. After painting the chances of success in such glowing colors, we consented, viz.: MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN and myself. We were bound not to divulge it to a living soul. I saw him once more in Baltimore, and then he (J. WILKES BOOTH) left to arrange his business up North, first to New-York, thence to the Oil Regions, and thence there to Boston, and finally to Canada. He was to be back in a month. I received a letter, which I destroyed, stating he was laid up with erysipelas in his arm, and as soon as he was able he would be with us. Months rolled around, and he did not make his appearance until some time in January. In the interim I had had two arms, rap and gudgeons, which were placed in the gun-stocks—Spencer rifles I think they were called—revolvers, knives, belts, cartridge-boxes, cartridges, caps, sentences—all fully fixed for service—which were to be used in case of pursuit, and two pair of handcuffs to handcuff the President. His trunk being so heavy, we got rope, knives and handcuffs in MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN and myself, to have shipped or bring to Washington. He then returned from Washington, to which place he had gone, bought a horse, harness and buggy wagon, leaving the team, &c., with us to drive on to Washington. We started from Baltimore about twelve to one o'clock, after having supped the box containing the knives, handcuffs and pistols, arriving in Washington about seven or half-past seven the same evening. We met him on the street as we were passing the theatre. We alighted, took a drink, and he told us of the theatre plan slightly, saying he would wait till we put the horse away, and tell us more fully. He had previously, as I now remember, spoken of the chances of the chances at we could not succeed in the other plan at the Soldiers' Home. We went to the theatre that night, he (J. WILKES BOOTH) telling us about the different back entrances, and how feasible the plan was. He had rented a stable in the rear of the theatre, having bought two horses down the country. One was in the stable behind the theatre, and the other was at his place next day; went together to breakfast with him. He was always pressed with business with a man unknown to us then, by the name of JOHN SURRATT; most of his (BOOTH'S) time was spent with him. We were left entirely in the dark. MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN and myself rented a room on D-street, No. 420, and obtained meals at the Franklin House, on the corner of D and Eighth streets. We thus lived for nearly two months, seeing him perhaps three or four times during the week, and, when seen, always but for a short time, having still pressing business always on hand, viz., to see JOHN SURRATT. MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN and myself drove out occasionally; the horse hired being kept at Mr. HALLOW'S stable. We drove always (but once) in the city and Georgetown; the once excepted, across the Eastern Branch bridge, when we went upward of five miles, I suppose, and returned. This was the only time I ever went over the bridge. How often J. WILKES BOOTH crossed I cannot state, but from his own words, often. Thus was MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN's and my time spent for the most part—down at Mullman's Hotel (now Sinclair House,) on Pennsylvania-avenue and Louisiana-avenue, in drinking and amusements, with other Baltimore and Southern congenial fellow-sufferers, all of whom knew nothing of our business but that of selling oil stock. Oil stock was the blind for them as well as my family. During the latter part of March, while standing on MULLMAN'S porch, between 11 and 12 o'clock P. M., a young man—name unknown, as I cannot remember name—about five feet five or six inches high, thick set, long face, long chin, wide cheeks, small eyes, (gray, I think,) dark hair and well dressed—color I don't remember—called MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN aside, and said J. WILKES BOOTH wished to access both at GOSNER's saloon, on the avenue. I was then for the first time introduced to him, but forget his name. We walked up to Gosner. MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN, this unknown man, myself were ushered into the presence of J. WILKES BOOTH, who introduced me to JOHN SURRATT, ATZERODT, alias Port Tobacco, ——, alias Moseby, making in all seven persons. J. WILKES BOOTH had sent word to MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN to bring me up in a good humor. (Still always in the dark.) Then commenced the plan for seizing the President. Each had his part to perform. First, I was to rush into the private box and seize the President, while ATZERODT, alias Port Tobacco, and J. WILKES BOOTH were to handcuff him and lower him on the stage, while —— Moseby was to catch him and hold him till we got down. SURRATT was to be out in the alley on the other side of the Eastern Branch bridge to facilitate escape. It was afterwards changed to Moseby and BOOTH to catch him in the box and to lower him to me on the stage. O'LAUGHLIN and the unknown were to put the lights out, and SURRATT and ATZERODT, alias Port Tobacco, to be on the other side of the bridge. I was opposed to the whole proceeding, and said it could not be accomplished. If it was, which was an impossibility, we could get him out of the box and to the bridge, we would be stopped by the sentinel. "Shoot the sentinel," said BOOTH. I said that would not do, for if an alarm was given there the whole thing was up, and, as for me, I wanted the chance of a chance for escape as well as success. MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN wanted to arrue the same way. Whereupon J. WILKES BOOTH said: "You find fault with everything concerned about it." I said no; that I wanted to have a chance, and I intended to have it; that he could be the leader of the party, but not my executioner. Whereupon J. WILKES BOOTH remarked, in a stern, commanding and angry voice, "Do you mean you are liable to be shot? Remember your oath." I told him the plan or basis had changed, and a compact on the part of one broken is broken by all. If you feel inclined to shoot me you have no further to go; I shall defend myself. This, it I remember aright, was on a Friday, or may be a Thursday night, when I said—Gentlemen, if this is not accomplished this week I forever withdraw from it. I stayed up till about 6 or 7 o'clock next morning, Friday or Saturday, and then went to bed. I remained indoors until 12, when I arose and went to get my breakfast. MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN and myself ate breakfast together, both arose at the same time, and were always in a mess, are, together. Went to bed that evening about 7:30 o'clock. This day that I went to bed so early we met about 2 or thereabouts, told me I spoke angrily the night of meeting; said I had been drinking. I told him no; I was in my sober senses and meant every word I said; if not accomplished this week I withdraw. Next day the thing was to be accomplished on the Seventh-street road and failed. On Sunday I stayed in Washington, came on Monday or Tuesday, returned to the City of Baltimore, and (hence to Hockstown, J. WILKES BOOTH in the meantime went to New-York, and returned to Baltimore during the week, on Saturday, I think. He said he wished to see me on very urgent business, and my father sent for me. I came from the country, and he had gone to Washington, whereupon I crossed on the latter which he loaned in his trunk. The Richmond authorities, as far as I know, knew nothing of the conspiracy. The letter was written after my return to the country, after finding he could not wait to see me in Baltimore. During the week I came to the city and met MICHAEL O'LAUGHLIN, who asked me to go to Washington with him to finally arrange his affairs. I went in the morning—Friday, I think—and returned same evening home, having cut loose forever from it. Next day I received a letter from J. W. WHERTON, at Fortress Monroe, giving me employment. Went to the country, got my closing, and on Saturday, the last day of April, left Baltimore for Fortress Monroe, at which place I have remained, never corresponding with BOOTH or seeing him from the above named date to the present writing. The groundwork was to kidnap the President without violence. He never to me said that we would kill him. Further, they know this I know nothing, and am innocent of having taken any active part in the dark deed committed. SAMUEL B. ARNOLD.

The plan of escape was to place Mr. LINCOLN in the buggy purchased for the purpose, and cross Eastern Branch bridge. SURRATT and ATZERODT, alias Port Tobacco, were to follow them to where he had a boat concealed; turn the horses loose, place the President in the boat, and cross the Potomac or the Virginia shore, and thence to make our way to Richmond. SURRATT knew the route, and was to act as pilot. SAMUEL B. ARNOLD.

A box painted black, like unto a sword-box, was sent by BOOTH from the hotel by the porter there to our room. The next night was transferred in a wagon, O'LAUGHLIN acting as pilot, to some place. I was not present. After giving the box to the driver went to Georgetown, and O'LAUGHLIN had full charge of it. M. O'LAUGHLIN said he took it to Mr. HEARD's, and from thence the unknown carried it home. Took the guns out and carried them to Pedee. This letter clause BOOTH told me. SAMUEL B. ARNOLD.

Witness: V. RAZEAUX, R. C. HOSMER.

BALTIMORE, April 18, 1865.

NOTE.—Besides this written statement of ARNOLD's, he verbally communicated the fact that BOOTH was the correspondent of Drs. MUDD, GARLAND, and QUEEN. This fact was told the Secretary when I presented him ARNOLD's statement. J. L. MCPHAIL.

CONFESSION OF ATZERODT.

I had not seen JOHN SURRATT for about eight days before the murder. BOOTH told me a few days before the murder that he was in Washington. KATE THOMPSON alias Brown, came from Richmond with JOHN SURRATT about the time that Richmond fell. He had come previously with GUSTAVUS HOWARD, now in the Old Capitol Prison. KATE THOMPSON stopped at Mrs. SURRATT's, and also at the National and Rinnel Hotels. This woman was about 21 years of age, sprunce and neat, medium size, black eyes and fair complexion. She had a sister in New-York, who, is was said, was a widow. SURRATT was made known to her in New-York by a signal conveyed by a small switch with a wired end and a piece of red ribbon on the butt, handled horizontally through the fingers. This sign was given on a hotel pavement on Broadway. He went with her South, and hired a horse at HOWARD's stables for the purpose.

HAROLD came to the Kirkwood House and left the knife, pistol and coat, on the evening of the murder, about 6:30 o'clock, as I was about leaving. I having told the clerk to tell whoever might call that I was gone out. This was before HAROLD came in. HAROLD and I then went to the Herndon House, Mrs. MURRAT's, corner of Ninth and F streets. It was then about 8 o'clock, and saw BOOTH, WOOD and PAYNE in WOOD's room. Here the proposed murder of first mentioned. I refused to take part in it, then BOOTH said, "Then we will do it." But what will become of you? you had better come along and get your horse." I then left them and went to the Oyster Bay on the avenue, and stayed some time; then to the stable and got my horse and went up D-street. This was about 10 o'clock. I tied at the Binnel House and got a drink. I saw none of the party after my return. I retired about 9 o'clock that evening. I then went out C-street toward the Baltimore depot; went between the old and new Capitol; came on the avenue again, and concluded to come back. I rode down the avenue and the cavalry were dashing by me. This was the first I heard of the murder. I then went up Eighth-street, left the horse at the stables opposite the Franklin House, and then went to the Herndon House, and heard a little boy talking about the murder. I then took a car and went toward the Navy-yard. This was about 11 o'clock; and I met two young men named Thomas Gardiner and Frank Evans, with whom I had some talk. After walking some distance I took a car to the corner of Sixth-street and Pennsylvania-avenue. Here I met a man inquiring for a place to sleep at. I took him around to the Binnel House, and we retired to one room with six beds in it. I left early next morning, and passed through Georgetown on my way to Montgomery County. No one left the hotel with me. I saw MIKE O'LAUGHLIN about a week before the President was killed. I never wanted O'LAUGHLIN and ARNOLD's aid; met O'LAUGHLIN once or twice at SURRATT's, and a few times in the street. When we were at SURRATT's, on the night of the murder, HAROLD said he had a letter from a printer to ANDY JOHNSON. He said he was going to give it to him, and he wanted me to give him the key of my room, which I remised to do. Previous to the arrangement for the murder BOOTH heard that the President was to visit a camp. The coach was to be taken at 9 Seventh-street. SURRATT was to jump on the box, as he was the best driver, and drive through Old Fields to the Long Bridge. This was about the middle of March. O'LAUGHLIN, SAMUEL ARNOLD, PAYNE, SURRATT, BOOTH, ATZERODT and HAROLD went to the Long Bridge with two carriages, one or two times, to see how it was guarded, and returned to Washington next morning. This failed. All was quiet then for some time. BOOTH went to New-York. ARNOLD to Baltimore, O'LAUGHLIN also, and PAYNE left for New-York. After this HOWELL brought a woman across the Potomac. HOWELL was made prisoner, and SURRATT took her to Boston, about a week before the murder. BOOTH told me that SURRATT was in the Herndon House. On the night of the murder, the 14th of April, we were not altogether at the Hendon House. BOOTH told me SURRATT was to help at the box; that he expected officers in the box. BOOTH went from the Herndon House down Ninth-street. The words of the Ninth-street were, "I saw SURRATT a few minutes ago." All the parties appeared to be engaged at something on that night, and were not together. BOOTH appointed me and HAROLD to kill JOHNSON. In going down the street I told BOOTH we could not do it. BOOTH said HAROLD had more courage, and he would use it. HAROLD and I went on Pennsylvania-avenue together. I told him I would not do it, and should not go to my room for fear he would disturb Mr. JOHNSON. He left me to go for BOOTH. This was after 9 o'clock. I went to Oyster Bay, and HAROLD came in and said that BOOTH wanted to see me. HAROLD left me here. I promised to get my horse and come. I was not at the Kirkwood House after 9 o'clock. I have no recollection of being there after that. I had nothing to say at any of the meetings. One of the attempts was at the theatre; the gas was to be put out, &c. No discussion was had about failure, and what to do in that case. The coil of rope at LLOYD's was to stretch across the road to stop the carriage. I know nothing about SPANGLER's rope; I believe him innocent. BOOTH told me an actor was to be the best assistant in the theatre to turn off the gas. ARNOLD and O'LAUGHLIN were to grab the President and take him off; and BOOTH said, when applied to for money, he would go to New-York and get some, as he had it there. Mrs. SURRATT, Mrs. SLATER, Major BANON and JOHN SURRATT left Washington together; got horses at Howard's. Mrs. SURRATT stopped at Surratsville. JOHN SURRATT and Mrs. SLATER crossed, and BANON and Mrs. SURRATT came back. BANON was in the rebel army. I don't think BANON knew anything of the conspiracy. I sold a horse for BOOTH and thought the affair was about over. The murder was broached first on the 14th, at night, when HAROLD came for me. I did hear BOOTH say LINCOLN ought to be killed. A widow woman was living near Mr. SURRATT, and BOOTH said by her influence he could get entrance to SEWARD's house, through her influence with the chambermaid and house servant. The girl at the house was good-looking and knew the widow. HAROLD was one it first; he came to Port Tobacco for me with JOHN SURRATT during the Winter. The boat was at the head of Goose Creek, and moved to Nanjemoy Creek. It was a land-locked, flat-bottom boat, and would carry fifteen men. This boat was bought of JAMES BRAWNER, the old man. Mrs. SLATER went with BOOTH a good deal. She stopped at the National Hotel.

BROOKLYN MERCANTILE LIBRARY.

Opening of the New Building—Large and Fashionable Assembly—Speeches by A. A. Low, Rev. Dr. Storrs, Rev. H. W. Beecher, S. B. Chittenden and Others.

In accordance with the announcement in the TIMES yesterday, the spacious and magnificent building of the Brooklyn Mercantile Library, in Montague-street, opposite the Academy of Music, was thrown open to the members of the Association and their friends last evening. There was a large and brilliant assemblage of ladies and gentlemen, notwithstanding the inconvenience experienced in consequence of the storm. Among the visitors were observed President-elect GRANT, Gen. SHERMAN, Gov. A. A. LOW, A. B. DAYLIS, Hon. JOSHUA M. VAN COTT, Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER, Rev. R. S. STORRS, Jr., D. D., S. B. CHITTENDEN, Hon. JNO. W. HUNTER, LUTHER B. WYMAN, and a host of other well-known and public-spirited citizens. The rooms generally visited every nook and corner of the edifice and contained every article, after which a meeting was organized in the Reading-room, Mr. FRANK WOODRUFF, President, in the chair.

Mr. WOODRUFF began the proceedings by thanking the ladies and gentlemen for their presence to view the new rooms, which had just been fully finished and handed over to the Mercantile Library Association.

Mr. J. S. FRONTINGHAM, Chairman of the Building Committee, then read the report of the work pertaining to the building, from the time of its inception in 1863 until the happy completion of its consummation, which had left the hands of the accomplished architect, Mr. WIDNEY. Mr. S. B. CHITTENDEN was the first gentleman to give encouragement to the project of erecting the Library by contributing the sum of $5,000, followed by other generous offerings by Mr. A. A. LOW, the President of the Association, and others. The cost of the building and lots was $148,000; furniture, gas, &c., $9,000; office building on the west side, $37,000; office building on east side, $22,600, making a total of $227,600, all of which has been paid for except $20,890, an amount which was to be raised by subscription. Mr. FROTHINGHAM's report was received with interesting facts relating to the efforts of the Committee and their friends from the beginning of the enterprise until its completion. It was well written and was awarded due praise by the auditors.

Mr. A. A. LOW said that now they had a building and a library which, with other attractions in Brooklyn, would exert a large influence in drawing people the right way. It was for that communion. They were indebted to the hand of young men in whose hands the small beginning had been developed into a thing of grandeur and usefulness. He alluded to the importance of the great library at Munich, in its influence upon the people not only of Bavaria, but of Europe, and of the other states of Europe. Europe was expressive of the will of royalty and nobility, but here our libraries were indicative of the literary and exalted tastes of the people, their genius and their generous.

Rev. Dr. STORRS remembered the meeting in the Athenæum seven years ago, at which the Library Association was formed, at which he was his pleasure to have been present. He alluded to the speedy development of an institution which had experienced such a feeble start. An institution to be strong must have numbers—not only numbers of membership, but numbers of working members. To be successful and powerful, it must be liberal, broad, and upon a wide base. That Association and the Historical Society were hemispheres which, together, constituted a grand orb for the enlightenment of the community. Both societies were grand symbols of the taste of the age and its people, just as in the olden times cathedrals were the indications of strength. He was sorry to observe that Mr. WM. E. DODGE, President of the Chamber of Commerce of New-York, was absent, but he was glad to say that he had sent his regrets and $500 toward liquidating the debt. This the speaker regarded as a new codge—a good dodge, [applause,] and he hoped the good example would be followed by others and the small remaining burden lifted from the institution.

Rev. HENRY WARD BEECHER was the next speaker. He said that he came to the city in 1847, when they had to grope their way through the streets by oil lamps. The first improvement was gas, which came about the time he did—[laughter,]—and it was wonderful what improvements followed. Launch, he! He alluded to the building of the Athenæum, to the sewering of the streets, the introduction of water, the Academy of Music, the Prospect Park. This was a time when Brooklyn must become a first-class city, or one of medium standard. There were men in that city getting richer every day, and they must be generous men or mean men. It was well enough to get a man's money after his death, but it was better to get it from him in his lifetime, although a man's money obtained after his death was not to be despised. It was an honor for men to have their names attached to the noble institutions of such a building as that. It was better to aid in the erection of such institutions than, as many did, to spend so much a great deal nearer the Rhine. We had come to an era when the two great elements that tended to make us great were God and brains. He concluded by congratulating the people on Brooklyn and himself on the completion of that building, and asking them to prepare for the claims of the Art Union and the Historical Society.

Mr. SAMUEL MCLEAN said that in view of what had been seen in the past, it was a marvel to look around and observe what had grown up, a building far beyond what they had ever had at one time. Attempts to house the Brooklyn Library had been made in vain; he remembered the time when an attempt to insinuate a library was met with the generous contribution of Congressional speeches, Patent Office reports, old pamphlets and old books and papers generally, of no use to the givers and of as little to the institution. The time was when they were not on a broad enough basis. Times had changed, however, and he was there to rejoice with them over the completion of so grand a monument to the tastes and the learning of the community. He hoped the time would come when their library would be free and their reading-room free also.

Mr. ABRAM B. BAYLIS thanked the audience for their goodness in coming to see the Trustees and their building. He hoped, however, before the meeting adjourned, something would be done toward clearing the little remaining debt.

Mr. S. B. CHITTENDEN urged that the $20,000 needed could be raised by the ladies, and not only this, but $100,000 with which to fill the alcoves with books. He said he was a people of Brooklyn, and thought if the cigar money of the gentlemen present for one year was surrendered, the $20,000 would be raised immediately. He said that if in a reasonable time the $20,000 was raised he would increase his second subscription of $5,000 to $7,500. And if within sixty days $20,000 was raised for books he would subscribe $5,000 a year for four years, if he lived, and if he did not live he would bequeath it to his children for the purpose.

The following subscriptions were then obtained:

A. A. Low	$5,000	Wm. E. Dodge	$500
S. B. Chittenden	5,000	Henry Pierrepont	500
A. B. Baylis	500	J. P. Robinson	500
A. H. Frothingham	500	Edwards Pierrepont	500
Frank Sprague	500	Gilbert Mason	500
James P. Wallace	500	Gen. S. W. Dickson	100
W. Newton Adams	500	C. Frothingham	25
Total			$15,625

The President said the Board of Directors would guarantee the whole amount in thirty days. He then declared the building duly dedicated to the purposes for which it was erected.

The audience then left the premises, all much delighted by what they had seen and heard.

The officers of the Library are Mr. L. B. MOTES, Librarian; WILLIAM A. BRADWEDE, Assistant Librarian, and MESSRS. SOPHIE ANTHONY, ANNE ANTHONY and ELDER, assistants. In the list of workmen who took part in the completion of the building, the names of Messrs. HEALLY & ROBERTS were omitted in the sketch of the building published yesterday.

SPORTING.

Great Cocking Main Between the North and the South—The Empire State versus the Old Dominion—New-York Victorious.

Hostilities have recommenced between the North and the South; New-York and Virginia are once more in antagonism, but this time it is in friendly rivalry as to which possesses the best and gamest strains of bulldog cocks.

About three weeks ago a main was made between New-York and Virginia; the former being represented by Mr. JAMES MURPHY, and the latter by Col. McDANIELS, of the Secession Rose-coupe, New-Jersey, who hails from the Old Dominion.

For some years past a main between Northern and Southern game fowls has been proposed and discussed in sporting circles, but the project was never realized until Col. McDANIELS recently brought in from Richmond a large number of birds of the best strains to be obtained in the State of Virginia, and on his proposing to make a main against New-York fowls, he was at once accommodated by the gentleman above named. The conditions of the main were to show nineteen cocks on each side, as weights ranging from four pounds two ounces to five pounds twelve ounces, and fight all that fell in for $100 each fight, and $1,000 the main. It was also stipulated that a penalty should be enforced for every minute's delay over the allowed time of twenty minutes' interval between each battle, so that there might be no time lost in bringing the main to a termination. Yesterday afternoon was the time fixed for the gallinaceous contest, and there was a large attendance of sporting men, including a considerable sprinkling of the aristocratic element, which has always evinced a decided penchant for this peculiar kind of sport, as the place appointed, which was a few miles drive into the interior of New-Jersey. The day was unfavorable, snow falling without cessation from early morn and rendering the roads somewhat heavy for traveling. The accommodations for spectators viewing the sport were not as extensive as the large assemblage required, but were the best obtainable under the circumstances. The tariff of admission to the extemporaneously-arranged pit was $5 a head, and a considerable sum must have been realized from this source. Two well-known skillful experts were engaged to heel and handle the birds, of which the Virginians were principally of the Stone Fence and Dominick strains, while the New-Yorkers were the Long Island breed, principally a cross between the Hamburgs and imported stock. New-York was the favorite in the betting on the main, $100 to $80 being currently offered, and one speculator was anxious to invest $1,000 to $800 in this way. There was, however, very little money bet on the main, the operators being anxious to speculate on each fight separately. Of the nineteen birds shown by each, eleven on each side fell in.

FIRST FIGHT—New-York showed a red and Virginia one slate, each weighing five pounds twelve ounces, being the heavy weights of the main. New-York was the favorite at twenty to sixteen at the start, but the Virginia bird showed to such advantage that the betting became even. Neither of the two were first-class fighters, but the Southern bird lost an eye, and, after fighting ten minutes, New-York won.

SECOND FIGHT—The light weights, four pounds two ounce birds, came next. New-York produced a black red of imported stock, and Virginia a black red with white hackle. At first the odds were ten to eight on New-York. The Virginia bird cut-fought the other at the start, but the aspect of affairs changed, and New-York was backed freely at even six. After they had been fighting six minutes, a sudden blow by the Virginian laid the New-York fowl helpless and beaten.

THIRD FIGHT—New-York showed a blue red and Virginia a brass hack, each weighing five pounds five ounces. The New-York bird was again the favorite at twenty to fifteen, and although he was badly cut at first he fought game and gained ground, and ultimately won the battle. The fighting was very quick on both sides in this battle.

FOURTH FIGHT—New-York showed a black red, with white hackle, and the South a black red—each five pounds. Ten to six laid on New-York, whose representative so cut-fought his opponent that ten to one was quickly laid, and in nineteen minutes the Virginia bird was sent to coubat.

FIFTH FIGHT—Offers of $100 to $40 on the main. The New-York fowl was a pile, and the other a black red—each four pounds twelve ounces weight. Both were fast fighters and quick cutters, but the New-York bird was the harder hitter, and in four minutes he killed his foe.

SIXTH FIGHT—A blue-red bird represented New-York, and a gray-birch Virginia, each four pounds ten ounces. The betting was twenty to fourteen on New-York, and very heavy, they having won four out of five battles up to this stage of the contest. It was a long-protracted battle, the Virginia bird showing marked game, and although he was not in such fine condition as the New-Yorker, he fairly outlasted him, for after fighting 37 minutes, the New-York bird turned tail and ran, giving the battle to Virginia.

SEVENTH FIGHT—New-York had now won four but lost and Virginia two. New-York showed a black red, and Virginia a black red with white birch, each five pounds two ounces. The doubtwing was the quicker fighter and harder cutter, and the odds on him rose from $20 to $14, to $10 to $1, and he cut his opponent so badly that after 19 minutes the Virginian traveled.

EIGHTH FIGHT—New-York showed a black red, and Virginia a pile, each four pounds three ounces. Betting $20 to $14 on New-York. Quick fighting, the Southern bird cutting the New-Yorker badly at first, but the latter revived and punished his foe so badly that he changed the aspect of affairs and ultimately won the fight. Time—Three minutes.

TENTH FIGHT—New-York showed a four-pound drop-wing brown hackle, and Virginia a four-pound twelve-ounce grey. The betting was $20 to $12 on the New-York bird, who was reported to be a ripper, but at the third fly the Virginian dealt him a cut which laid him dead in the pit. Time—One minute.

ELEVENTH FIGHT—New-York showed a brass hackle, and Virginia a speckled grey. This was a good fight, the New-Yorker taking the lead, but soured at first that ten to three was bet on him. The Virginian persevered, and punished his antagonist so badly that the odds changed to ten to one on him, and in fifteen minutes he laid him dead in the pit. This was the last fight, New-York having won seven out of the eleven fought.

Resolutions of the Police Board Upon the Death of Inspector Leonard.

Commissioners BOSWORTH, MATHEWS and BRENNAN being present at a meeting of the Board of Metropolitan Police, held yesterday, the following resolutions were adopted:

Resolved, That the sudden and unexpected death of Inspector JAMES LEONARD, stricken down unwarned while in the apparent enjoyment of vigorous health, is a startling and memorable illustration of the frailty of human life, and has filled with grief and mourning the home recently made happy by his presence, and created a profound sorrow in all with whom he was officially connected.

Resolved, That the deceased, during his twenty-three years of service in the Police Department, in the position of Patrolman, Captain, and Inspector, was untiring in the performance of duty, and in his efforts to preserve the peace and protect the citizens of this city, and render it worthy of the confidence of the community, whose persons and property they are appointed to protect. He felt an earnest interest as the Inspector of the new appointments in making them familiar with their duties, and inspiring them with the conviction that their position was one of great responsibility, where honor could be won by a faithful performance of duty. As a disciplinarian he had no superior in the Department. His agreeable temper and courteous demeanor were always conspicuous, and under circumstances where it was so difficult for most men to preserve the one or practice the other.

Resolved, That his death has deprived the Police Department of one of its most intelligent, gentlemanly and most valuable officers, and created a vacancy which it will be difficult to fill with one equally fitted to discharge the duties he has so successfully and zealously performed.

Resolved, That the members of this Board tender their heartfelt sympathies to the widow and family of the deceased, in their unexpected bereavement.

Resolved, That as a mark of their respect for the deceased, the members of this Board will attend his funeral and wear the on tomary badges of mourning for the period of thirty days.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, signed by the members of this Board, be presented to the widow of the deceased.

Commissioner Acton.

It is generally known that Hon. THOMAS C. ACTON, President of the Board of Police Commissioners, has for some time past been so seriously ill that he has not been able to attend to the duties of his position. Sunday last he was quite prostrated in consequence of the shock he received by the sudden death of Inspector LEONARD, but yesterday he rallied to a great extent, and in the evening was able to be rapidly recovering from the relapse from which he had suffered. He will not, however, be able for some time yet to resume his place in the Police Board.

SERRIN made an address on "Electricity as a Therapeutical Agent," the substance of which was, that health is electrical equilibrium; disease is the disturbance of that equilibrium; cure is its restoration. Remedies taken from the mineral kingdom cannot be otherwise than inferior, because the blood cannot assimilate them, "which is abundantly proved," said the speaker, "by the testimony of numerous patients whom electricity has cured of diseases which drugs had only aggravated." After the address came the election of officers.
